Truman Ponders Lifting Ban On Arms Shipments

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Truman is studying the question of lifting the United States embargo on arms shipments to the entire Middle East, a White House official disclosed today. The embargo has been in effect since last December.

Lifting of the arms ban affecting the entire area would permit Arabs as well as Jews in the new Jewish State of Israel to buy weapons in the United States.

The White House source, who declined to be quoted by name, at first mentioned only Palestine. Later the official broadened this to say the entire Middle East was involved.

The fact the government is studying these two steps followed President Truman's announcement of United States recognition of the State of Israel late Friday. Truman's action came almost immediately after the Jews had proclaimed the birth of their nation in the Holy Land.

United States recognition was on a "de facto" basis—that is merely recognizing that such a state exists. This differs from "de jure" recognition, which involves exchange of diplomatic representatives with a legally constituted government.

NO SUDDEN DECISION

Charles G. Ross, White House press secretary, told reporters the President's action in recognizing the provisional government of Israel was "not a matter of snap judgment."

He said Truman had had the action in mind a good while. He added that it is "impossible to fix a timetable on the approaches to a decision."

Diplomatic officials previously had said possible lifting of the ban might be considered. However, they indicated main United States efforts would be directed toward winning a truce in the Holy Land dispute between the Jews and Arabs.

By Associated Press

Creation of the new Hebrew state of Israel and its quick recognition by the United States brought joy today to the Jews and confusion to the Arabs.

There was dancing in the streets in many cities. In the United Nations the Arabs were so angry they could hardly speak. Some shouted they had been duped and one cried that the whole U.N. Special Assembly was a fake.

President Truman's announcement of U.S. recognition brought consternation to the U.N. Assembly, which after five weeks of debate has failed to do anything about the Palestine crisis as a whole.

ACTION BY GUATEMALA

Guatemala quickly followed suit. Zionist officials predicted that other countries, including Russia would fall into line.

Andrei A. Gromyko, Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister, commented to the Assembly that the "Jewish state is in existence."

In London, the Foreign Office withheld comment on United States recognition. A government spokesman said it was a good guess Britain will not accord the new state diplomatic recognition "until it is determined that it is an effective administration of the country."

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—The U.S. Coast Guard said early this afternoon it was recalling air and surface craft which had sought some trace of a mystery ship. An SOS at 12.45 a.m. said an unidentified ship had hit a mine and was sinking rapidly. Searchers found nothing in the designated area off northern California.

PASCO, Wash. (AP)—The first water of billions of gallons to come flowed through the canals of the Columbia Basin Irrigation Project today to the 5,500-acre Pasco unit. The big work is intended to turn more than a million acres of semi-arid land into a man-made garden spot.

Welcome Health Plan

EDMONTON (CP) — Hon. W. W. Cross, Alberta health minister, commenting today on the federal government's proposed health insurance plan, said anything in the way of assistance in carrying on public health work is welcome news. Provincial health officials estimated some $2,000,000 would come ot Alberta under the plan announced Friday in the Commons.

Buying-Order Flood Hits Wall Street

The exchange was forced to use its emergency system of "flashing" prices from the trading floor, to give an up-to-the-minute picture of the market. The high speed ticker tape lagged as much as 13 minutes behind actual trading.

Generally prices were up a few cents to more than $1 a share.

5 Russians Killed

TEHERAN (Reuter) — Five Russians were killed today in a skirmish with Iranian frontier guards on the Azerbaijan border.

A party of 40 Russians was trying to cross the frontier, Iranian military circles stated.

Soldiers Aid Farmers In Manitoba's Battle Of The Dikes

Although the army engineers shown on the farmer's wagon above attempted three and four days ago, with the assistance of volunteers, to plug dikes in the Baie St. Paul district, about 30 miles west of Winnipeg, the floods there were still spreading today.

Assiniboine Dam West Of Winnipeg Breaks; Main Highway Under Water

WINNIPEG (CP)—No. 1 Highway near Marquette, 34 miles west of Winnipeg, was closed today following a break in the dam holding back the swollen Assiniboine River.

The break took place at a point where the river bends, with water sweeping over the highway to a depth of several feet, washing out a 20-foot stretch of road.

Highways department officials said no efforts at repairs could be made until the river level dropped sufficiently to carry away the road water. The highway will be closed all week-end and possibly well into next week.

CULVERT ENDANGERED

Fears also were expressed concerning a culvert one mile east of Marquette, with officials afraid it would be washed out unless the Assiniboine level dropped fast. Water was splashing over the top of a bridge near the dam break, but the structure was still standing.

For the eighth time since the flood menace developed in Manitoba, soldiers were called upon to aid civilian volunteers in raising dikes and plugging holes in them.

A detachment of army engineers from Winnipeg strove until late Friday night to fill gaps in dikes at Curtis Siding, eight miles east of Portage la Prairie, where water was flooding farmlands.

The situation was described as "serious" at Newton, near Curtis Siding, where wheatland acreage has been extensively flooded.

The Assiniboine also surged over dikes at Lido Plage, 15 miles west of Winnipeg, but by nightfall workers had succeeded in keeping the water from flooding the highway further.

It was reported earlier the water covered the highway to a depth of three inches. Flood waters also were overrunning Sunnyside, two miles east of Lido Plage, and they were spreading at Baie St. Paul, 28 miles west of Winnipeg.

BREAKS UNMENDED

Tired soldiers who returned late Friday night from Curtis Siding reported they had been unable to deal with two breaks in a dike. They concentrated on strengthening it elsewhere.

While farmers in Saskatchewan and Alberta waited to get on the land as those provinces dried out, farmers in British Columbia's Cariboo district, 150 miles northeast of Vancouver, were forced to abandon their homes near the swollen Bonaparte River, which has inundated thousands of acres of crop and pasture land.

Girl Severely Shocked By Freak Kitchen Explosion

Sixteen-year-old Inge Walter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Walter, suffered severe case of shock this morning in a freak explosion of considerable force which occurred in the kitchen stove of their 601 Trutch Street home.

Explosion occurred in the coal-burning portion of a new combination coal and gas stove. It was of such force, in the opinion of Fire Chief Robert Brindle, that it was probably caused by a detonator being overlooked when the fuel was sent from the mine.

"It was a most peculiar explosion. In my opinion it could not be caused by an accumulation of gas as it was too severe," he said.

Explosion blew the side of the stove out, throwing soot in all directions. Even plates in the living-room were knocked to the floor.

Troops With Bayonets Hold Back Pickets At St. Paul

SOUTH ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP)—National Guardsmen with fixed bayonets held back a surly crowd of about 500 persons here today as automobiles containing workers followed by more than a score of military vehicles carrying soldiers moved into the strike-bound Swift & Co. packing plant.

The strike, for higher wages, was called by the United Packinghouse workers' Union (C.I.O.) in mid-March.

Guardsmen broke up one scuffle quickly when a man in the crowd attempted to seize a soldier's rifle.

Persons in the crowd gave boos, curses and catcalls. Some sang the national anthem mockingly. A small detachment of guardsmen on duty when the first automobiles of workers started moving into the plant were quickly reinforced.

THREATS, SALUTES

More than 25 automobiles loaded with workers moved into the plant in quick succession. The crowd lining the edge of the street near the Swift plant entrance shouted threats and surged forward as the workers drove by. Many in the crowd gave simulated Nazi salutes as the trucks rolled by.

A half track carrying a squad of carbine-armed soldiers patrolled the nearby downtown area of South St. Paul.

Thirty-four National Guard trucks including convoy vehicles half-tracks, jeeps and ambulances moved into the plant.

NEWPORT, Minn (AP)—Minnesota National Guardsmen moved into strikebound meat packing plants here and in South St. Paul early today.

Detachments were bivouacked at the Cudahy plant here and the Swift and Armour plants at South St. Paul, across the Mississippi River. The troops moved in trains of trucks and other motorized equipment.

Outbreaks of violence have occurred at both plants. Thursday night about 200 raiders broke into the Cudahy plant to slug workers and create damage.

United Packinghouse Workers employed in the two towns by the Swift, Armour and Cudahy meat packing companies, have been on strike for higher pay since March 16.

Governor Luther W. Youngdahl Friday called the guardsmen to assist local authorities.

TASK FORCE

National Guard officers described it as a modified task force consisting of one infantry regiment and a battalion of artillery.

Glenn Chinander, union field man, gave out a statement saying the union regarded the calling of the National Guard as aligning the state government on the side of the packing companies.

SHANGHAI (AP)—Russia unexpectedly granted United States consular personnel visas to enter Dairen late today.

The northeast China port was seized by the Russians at the war's end and all but a few foreigners have been denied entry. Consular officials have been waiting here for months for visas.

Vice-Consul Izaac Patch and his family have been stranded in Dairen awaiting home leave in the United States.

Jewish Troops Drive Northward To Meet Danger

TEL AVIV (CP)—A fourth air attack on the Tel Aviv area was made this afternoon.

Hagana reported enemy Spitfires attacked several Jewish settlements in the Samakh area of the Jordan Valley. The Jewish airdrome at Akir near Rehovoth in southern Palestine also was attacked by air.

Hagana said Egyptian artillery and tanks were attacking the Nerim settlement in Negeb.

Hagana forces occupied the Arab village of Malakir on the Lebanese border and were "in contact" with Lebanese forces.

Enemy planes dropped leaflets on the Urim settlement in the Negeb calling on the settlers to surrender.

Hagana further reported the Arab attack against the settlement of Kfar Adarom was continuing.

Earlier Hagana reports had said one plane was shot down and its Egyptian pilot was taken prisoner.

Military sources said the Hagana forces faced this line-up of enemy troops:

South—Egyptian troops, said to include armored units, invading since one minute past midnight as the British mandate officially ended.

East—The forces of King Abdullah of Trans-Jordan moving across the River Jordan. His Arab Legion already in Palestine (where it has helped British troops in police duties), shelling Jewish positions south of the Sea of Galilee.

North—Regular troops of Syria, Lebanon and Iraq crossing the frontier. Jews reported on the offensive in this area in defence of their northern Palestine settlements.

(An Egyptian communique said Egyptian planes had bombed Tel Aviv's military airport, wrecking the hangar and one DC-3 plane on the ground. The bulletin declared an Egyptian army column had crossed the border into Palestine this morning and destroyed the Jewish colony of Al Dangor with artillery. An earlier communique said another column was spearing toward Gaza.

Air Raids Stop Celebrations

The Jewish army said two attacks on Tel Aviv came three hours apart, shortly after Jews had danced in the streets at news of the birth of their nation and the U.S. recognition of its existence.

The Jewish army drove north in Galilee to bolster the area against possible invasions from Syria and Lebanon.

Along the coastal area north of Haifa, Arab villages have been cleared from Acre north to Naharyia and beyond, Hagana said. The Arab city of Acre sued for peace after a sharp night attack, Jewish informants in Haifa reported.

Hagana announced the entire population of Kfar Etzion settlement south of Jerusalem, and Bethlehem, has been wiped out by the Arab Legion, and men and women alike had been slain. The Arabs inflicted casualties and took prisoners in two tiny communities of the Kfar Etzion bloc. Resistance is continuing in another settlement there.

GUIDANCE FOR REPORTERS

The government imposed censorship, informing correspondents they will be given "security guidance" on information sent out on the air attacks. Hagana rushed its troops to all the frontiers, bent on shortening lines and building up defences against invasion.

(A dispatch from Kineitra, Syria, said a Syrian mobile brigade sped southward toward the Sea of Galilee past cheering villagers. Some Syrian forces streamed toward the Lebanese coast Friday, apparently bent on operations in co-operation with troops from Lebanon.)

In Haifa, where the flag of Israel flutters on Mount Carmel overlooking the new state's chief port, Jewish sources said Hagana is seeking to bring the entire northern frontier area under control.

Hagana said its forces moved in swiftly in Jerusalem areas abandoned by British authorities Friday with the end of the 25-year mandate. A U.N. consular team is continuing negotiations for a truce in the holy city.

The first air attack came at 6 a.m. today in Tel Aviv.

(An official source in Cairo said Egyptian air force planes flew over Tel Aviv today and dropped pamphlets demanding that all inhabitants surrender with their arms, raising white flags, within an hour.

("If the demand is not met," the pamphlets were quoted as saying, "you will be treated as aggressors who want fighting.")

The raiding planes came in low, dived and dropped six bombs at the edge of the Tel Aviv airport, near the power station. Airport workers said Jewish fighters drove them off.

Inhabitants of Haifa, Palestine's biggest port and now largely in Jewish hands, heard cannon and mortar fire and saw gun flashes from Acre.

Ships Rush To Aid Of Tanker Aground Off Coast Of N.S.

HALIFAX (CP)—Two powerful tugs and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police cutter Irvine were rushing to the assistance of the Imperial Oil tanker Imperial Welland, which went aground off Canso, N.S., early today.

Crew of the tanker was already to abandon ship after the tanker had struck on Cranberry Island and the engineroom flooded. All power was cut off and the regular wireless transmitter thrown out of commission.

The last message from the ship said the men were saving the emergency battery-powered transmitter for a further distress message if their position should become more serious.

The 2,052-ton tanker was en route from Lewisport, Nfld., supply base for the Gander Airport, to Halifax when she went aground.

Catch Prisoners In City Jail Sawing Through Bars

Acting Chief of Police J. Blackstock revealed this morning that prisoners in the city lock-up one night this week were caught in an attempt to saw their way through bars to freedom.

The acting chief did not indicate exactly who was responsible for the act, but said several were involved. Whether any police action against the responsible parties for this will result, was not revealed.

According to Acting Chief Blackstock one of the bars of a west side window had been completely sawn through and a couple of others had been started on when the escape effort was detected by police on duty in the charge office.

The bars were being worked on with hacksaws which had been smuggled to the prisoners.

Several in the cellblock have been sentenced to prison terms.

Canada Most Likely To Recognize New Jew State, Israel

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada will probably recognize the new Jewish State in Palestine after consultation with the British government, a cabinet source indicated Friday night.

He said he hoped and believed that President Truman's announcement of recognition for the "New State of Israel" had been preceded by consultations with Britain.

"We hope the great powers will follow parallel lines and the smaller powers would naturally fall in line," he said.

Canada's recognition of the new state would not necessarily be delayed until Britain announced a similar step, the source said, but certainly would not be granted until it was known what course the Attlee government will follow.

PROTECT CANADIANS

Meanwhile External Affairs Minister St. Laurent indicated in the Commons Friday the Canadian government is relying on the British government to protect Canadian nationals in Palestine.

When asked by T. L. Church, P.C., Toronto-Broadview, what steps the government had taken to protect Canadian nationals, now that the British mandate had ended, Mr. St. Laurent said:

"This government has felt that it would be rather impertinent for it to try to intrude to affect the measures being taken by the mandatory power which not only over the years but over the centuries has given proof that it was always conscious of its responsibilities and always did what I think most reasonable men would feel was proper in the discharge of its responsibilities."

He was sure the United Kingdom had taken all steps necessary to protect her own nationals.

Confer Rebekah Degree

Over 160 members of the Rebekahs were present in I.O.O.F. Hall this week when the Rebekah Degree was conferred upon six candidates by officers of Laurel Rebekah Lodge, Ladysmith.

Prior to the meeting 29 visitors from Ladysmith were guests of Colfax Lodge at a banquet, convened by Mrs. E. Cave. During the meeting, bouquets of flowers were presented to Mrs. A. Gonnason, a mother holding active membership in Colfax for 45 years and to Mrs. R. Lambert, the youngest mother present.

The next sewing meeting was announced for May 26, at the home of Mrs. M. Silver, 1509 Shorncliffe Drive. Announcement was also made of a joint basket picnic with Odd Fellows and Rebekahs and their families at Shawnigan Lake on July 1. Buses will leave the Victoria depot at 10 and again at 11 in the morning.

Plans for the I.O.O.F. Grand Lodge and Rebekah Assembly Convention in Victoria in June were discussed.

M.P. Inquires About Freight Rates For Hudson Bay Line

OTTAWA (CP) — Transport Minister Chevrier has yet to disclose whether freight rate increases, applicable to most of Canada, are to be applied to the Hudson Bay route and the Port of Churchill.

R. R. Knight, C.C.F., Saskatoon, prompted by the prairies' "annual anxiety about the Hudson Bay route," Friday night questioned the Transport Minister, but due to the lateness of the hour, a reply was deferred.

If the government had changed the rates on the Hudson Bay road, Mr. Knight wondered on what authority, "because apparently the Hudson Bay road is outside the system which applied for an increase in freight rates."

Apparently, he said, there was also a misunderstanding on ocean rates from Churchill to British ports.

He disclosed that "certain correspondence was undertaken between the Timber Board of Saskatchewan and some British importers and the board was informed there was a difference of $11 a thousand in ocean rates on lumber as between Halifax and Churchill."

To Raise Funds To Provide Home For Senior Citizens

A campaign to raise $100,000 to provide homes for senior citizens was endorsed today by the United Church of Canada.

The project to provide homes for the aged was approved by delegates attending the B.C. conference of the United Church here. June 6 was the date set for the start of the campaign.

The conference endorsed a resolution calling for the securing of a home already built in Vancouver. Necessary steps will also be taken to secure acreage in Burnaby United Church home property, for a planned development for cottage bungalows for senior citizens.

W. J. Poulton, chairman of the Senior Citizens' Committee, said the project would be expanded as time went on. The whole plan would include a home for transient and retired church workers.

The conference authorized a selected committee to confer with the B.C. government with reference to government aid.

It was pointed out that in carrying out these projects a charge would be made for residence in these homes to cover current maintenance, repairs, depreciation and management.

Hearing Thursday In Fraud Attempt Cases

David Cavadas and Gordon H. Stevenson, Vancouver men, charged on three counts with conspiracy to defraud local banks and charges of unlawfully obtaining food and lodgings from the Empress Hotel, appeared in city police court today and were remanded to next Thursday to set a day for trial of Cavadas.

Stevenson earlier pleaded guilty to the three bank charges pleaded not guilty to the hotel count. Cavadas has not pleaded or made election in any of the charges against him and is being represented by a Vancouver lawyer. Cavadas is out on bail. Stevenson still behind bars.

Magistrate H. C. Hall today pointed out to Stevenson that while normally he would have been sentenced before now, he would see that accused's sentence was dated back when the time came.

U.S. Recognition Of Israel Poses New Problem For U.N.

LAKE SUCCESS (CP) — The United Nations, staggering from the shock of United States recognition of Israel, today faces a new set of problems arising from that act.

With the second special session on Palestine concluded, no formal meetings were scheduled today. But the five permanent members of the Security Council — China, France, Russia, Britain and the United States — might meet to choose a U.N. mediator between Arabs and Jews.

29 DAYS OF WORK

During the 29-day special session, the only solution of the Palestine problem on which the 58 members of the world agency were able to agree was appointment of:

1. The mediator, who will have no governmental powers but will try to persuade the Jews and Arabs to arrange a truce and run common services. His appointment was provided for during a turbulent session Friday night by a vote of 31 to 7, with 17 abstentions. Britain and Canada voted for the United States proposal.

2. A "mayor" for Jerusalem who will depend largely on Arab and Jewish co-operation. Harold Evans, an American Quaker, was appointed to the post by Gen. Sir Alan Cunningham before the High Commissioner of Palestine sailed for England as the British mandate expired at midnight Friday night.

TASKS FOR COUNCIL

These were some of the questions with no immediate answers:

1. What will the Security Council do about the Jewish state's charge of invasion of Palestine by Arab states? The Security Council must examine legitimate threats to peace.

2. Will the United States lift its arms embargo on Palestine?

3. Which countries next will recognize Israel and what effect will such recognition have on the Jewish state's chance of soon becoming a U.N. member?

Police Seeking Driver Of Truck Which Injured Man

City police today are seeking the owner of a truck which struck John Molesda, 57, Gang 18 of the C.N.R., and failed to stop and render assistance to the badly-injured pedestrian. The accident occurred at 12.50 this morning at Fisgard and Government Streets.

Police took Molesda to Jubilee Hospital suffering from a fractured left leg and lacerations to the face. His address is listed as corner of Regina Avenue and Douglas Street.

According to the police report, the pedestrian was walking from the south to the north curb on the west side of Government when he was hit.

The truck, the license number of which was not obtained, was proceeding south on Government and turning west on Fisgard. After the collision it kept going, police report.

B.C. May Go Ahead With Plans For Big Office Building Here

Works Minister E. C. Carson said today that he will recommend to the provincial cabinet that the Provincial government go ahead with its plans to build a $1,500,000 permanent office building at Government and Belleville Streets.

Plans are for a four story brick and concrete structure which would cover a considerable part of the block bounded by Belleville, Government, Elliott and Douglas Streets. The provincial government acquired not long ago part of this property on Government and Belleville Streets from the Canadian National Railways which had purchased the property years ago for a hotel.

Mr. Carson indicated that the government would have to do something shortly to relieve the serious overcrowding not only in the Parliament Buildings but in other provincial offices elsewhere in Victoria.

Plans for the building are such that the structure could be built in two stages and it is possible that the government may go ahead with the construction of half the building at this time.

Mr. Carson indicated that the building could be completed in nine months.

The plans which were drawn some time ago call for a U-shaped building facing on Belleville, Government and Elliott Streets. It would have four stories and a basement.

Completion of the building would relieve the overcrowding in the Parliament Buildings and permit the government to vacate offices from up-town. At the present time the government rents space in more than half a dozen office buildings in the heart of Victoria's business district.

Mr. Carson reported that rents of these buildings had been doubled in many cases and the only long-term solution of the government's housing problem here was construction of the large permanent building.

Sums for the building were set aside in 1947.

It is not the intention of the government to put up a building with ornate stone work similar to the Parliament Buildings. The cost would prohibit this. The building, Mr. Carson indicated, would be a plain substantial structure.

Expanding provincial government services, particularly building up of staffs to handle the administration of the retail sales tax and the hospital insurance scheme, have made the government's housing problem more acute now than ever before.

A $180,000 temporary building erected on Superior Street behind the Parliament Buildings, originally designed to relieve the shortage of space in the Parliament Buildings, will largely be taken over by the staffs of the two new services.

Housing of provincial government employees in Vancouver is also a problem, Mr. Carson indicated, but it was unlikely that the government would start a building program there at the present time. He suggested it was possible the province may buy a building in the mainland city to house growing staffs.

Red Shield Drive At Halfway Mark

The halfway mark in the Salvation Army's current Red Shield Campaign was reached today, campaign headquarters report.

Ten thousand dollars of the $20,000 objective for Greater Victoria has been subscribed.

It was noted by campaign officials it will not be possible to have canvassers call at every home. They ask, therefore, that persons wishing to contribute to the drive mail their donations to Red Shield Headquarters, Prince Robert House.

The campaign will continue until the end of the month.

Crowds Rush Gates As British Couple Visit Versailles

PARIS (Reuter) — Crowds which had waited for hours rushed the gates today when Princess Elizabeth and Prince Philip arrived at the historic palace of Versailles.

The royal couple, still driving in their closed-in Dailmer, set out from the British Embassy on the second day of their Paris visit.

In brilliant sunshine under a cloudless blue sky, the Royal couple drove through tree-lined avenues along the 15-mile police-lined route from which all public traffic had been diverted.

It took them past the Arc de Triomphe, along the Boulevard de la Grand Armee and the Porte Maillot, past the Bois de Boulogne and Longchamps racecourse out into the suburbs and the countryside south of the city.

FLAGS ON CAFES

All Versailles cafes were decked in flage.

The Princess wore a white straw beret-styled hat and a green dress. The Duke was wearing a lounge suit and was hatless.

The royal couple were escorted through the magnificent suites, chambers and galleries of the palace. They saw the famous Hall of Mirrors where the peace treaty of the First World War was signed.

They looked at celebrated paintings and saw the room where Louis XIV died and where Louis XV was born and died.

Major Bering Sea Earthquake Causes Tidal Wave Scares

HONOLULU (AP) — A major earthquake apparently on the floor of Bering Sea sent tidal wave alerts flying through the Aleutians and Hawaii Friday, but no high waves appeared.

Before the alerts were called off some Hawaiians had fled to the hills. Freighters, fishing sampans and other small craft in the port of Hilo put to sea. Trucks and heavy cranes were moved to high ground.

The memory was still fresh of the tidal wave disaster of 1946 which caused 175 deaths in the Hawaiian Islands from an Aleutian earth shock. No one was taking any chances.

Even on populous Oahu, which is more protected, swimmers were warned to get out of the water.

Precautions also were taken in the Aleutians, where the army, navy and coast guard have men stationed on some of the islands.

The U.S. coast and geodetic survey station at Barber's Point said the centre of the submarine disturbance apparently was near Umnak, the first Aleutian island west of Unalaska, where Dutch Harbor is located.

The only ship at sea reporting it felt the quake was the motor vessel Square Knot, 100 miles or less northwest of Umnak Island.

Creed Accepted By B.C. Junior Chamber

The creed of the American Junior Chamber of Commerce was adopted for use by B.C. Junior Chambers at this morning's session of the regional convention in the Empress Hotel.

The creed reads:

"We believe that the brotherhood of man transcends the sovereignty of nations; that economic justice can best be won by free men through free enterprise; that government should be of laws rather than of men; that earth's great treasure lies in human personality, and that service to humanity is the best work of life."

"In a world where ideologies are becoming more and more important it seems to me we should have something to show just where we stand and for what we stand," Mr. McKay said.

The creed was accepted unanimously by the delegates. Mr. McKay said he would sponsor the creed at the next Canadian conference to have it accepted across the country.

Chevrolet Well Proven In Gruelling Run

BORN IN WAR

AIR ATTACKS AND AN IMMEDIATE invasion by armed Arab columns from neighboring countries have tempered the joy with which the Jews of Palestine celebrated the first day of life for their independent state of Israel. President Truman was quick to offer United States recognition of the Jewish government which took over control of part of the Holy Land as British authority withdrew at midnight last night. But the outlook for partitioned Palestine is still uncertain, and history may lay a good deal of the blame for present conditions at the door of the United Nations.

The Jewish state has come into being chiefly through the armed determination of Jews who want to see their dreams of a homeland become a reality. The U.N. recommendation regarding partition, which would have given official international approval to what has now in effect happened, was nullified by the United States decision to reverse her stand—an action which was based on the belief that partition could not be enforced without armed intervention, plus the realization that such force on an international scale was not in existence. Britain, ever since her announcement of intention to relinquish the mandate which she had held over Palestine since the First Great War, has stayed aloof from any proposed solution which depended upon the application of force. What has happened, then, is simply that a determined people, in the absence of any other qualified authority, has fought to establish itself as an organized state, and is prepared to fight to maintain it.

The extent to which the latter resolution will be necessary, and the possibilities of Jewish success in such an event, are still difficult to assess. Against a fairly well defined Jewish force, Hagana, will be ranged Arab strength of undetermined size and training. Egyptian troops are reported already in action. Invasions from Syria and Lebanon are expected, and Trans-Jordan, with its trained Legion, is seen as the spearhead of attack. There exists considerable doubt, however, regarding Arab cohesion, according to observers on the scene. A full-scale war in the Holy Land is almost a certainty. Whether it can be contained within that area is not so sure.

AN OLD STORY

AT LEAST ONE MILITARY EXPERT has reached the conclusion that the latest war weapons would be so devastating in their effects that no nation dare use them. A similar argument was employed during the interval between the first and second great conflicts. Back in the 'thirties a gullible world heard and read much about bombs that would devastate cities, about small containers that would distribute germs that might do anything and everything to the human frame, about a mythical ray that would paralyze whole communities. Well, the atomic bomb nearly three years ago flattened out two Japanese cities and, incidentally, hastened the end of part of the war which the Axis nations began.

Hundreds of communities, both in the Occident and in the Orient, were reduced to rubble and their inhabitants driven into underground caves many months before Hiroshima and Nagasaki paid the price of totalitarian aspiration. All of which, reduced to the common denominator, suggests that if the peoples of the world really are desirous of saving what is left of what we proudly call our modern civilization, they will see to it that the "merchants of death" who profit by the manufacture of munitions are dealt with according to their desserts. Yet the Krupps, the dye trust, and others of their ilk are not to be punished as war criminals. What are they, if they are not almost as guilty as those minions who obeyed the dictates of Hitler, Mussolini, and the man who conceived the Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity sphere?

WE MUST DECIDE

WHEN THE MIND HAS BECOME obsessed with the sociological and political problems of mankind, and the "neighborhood" squabbles of the globe prey too heavily on the consciousness, it is helpful sometimes to regain a sense of perspective by measuring man's strivings with the yardstick of astronomy. Contemplation of the fathomless vastness of time and space, of the immensity of nature's universal forces, tends to place the petty conflicts and ambitions of the earth in a new light. There is not necessarily comfort in the contemplation of the stellar spaces, but there is a logic and a grandeur that is attractive, despite its negation of man's egostistical estimate of his importance in the universe.

One need not read long of the heavens, with their billions of miles, their billions of years, their incredibly huge masses of exploding gases which we know as stars, and their still more incredibly vast reaches of utter darkness and cold, to begin to have a new view of one's own place in creation. To fight and die to steal a few square yards or miles of this particular, infinitely small speck of matter floating in an infinite void becomes an act of obvious stupidity.

To strive to dominate one's fellowmen, to kill or to reduce to slavery even a small number of one's all-too-scarce fellow humans in this incalculably great universe of white-hot, exploding suns and dead, black emptiness, becomes a pitiful suicidal act.

Whether one holds that the advent of life on this planet is the result of mere accident in the chemical group of hydrocarbons, or whether he inclines to a belief in Divine creation, the result should be the same as regards the relations between man and man. This relatively tiny handful of living beings can so order their world that peace and plenty will be their lot. Or they can, through selfish ambition and greed, make it a place of sorrow and death. The whirling nebulae of outer space will not be affected one way or the other. Our happiness—or our misery—is in our own hands.

FOR BETTER HEALTH

MR. MACKENZIE KING'S ANNOUNCEment yesterday of preliminary public health measures designed to lead eventually to a national system of health insurance is one that will be welcomed by the country at large. No field of welfare in this postwar period has so engaged the attention of the federal and provincial governments as that of public health, and the Prime Minister's survey of proposed steps for which he will ask Parliamentary approval provides a wide basis for future action. It will be recognized that so vast a program will require a sound foundation of facts on national health before concrete steps may be taken to implement it, and to achieve this Mr. King has listed a health survey as one of the first necessities. Closely allied with this, and costing an estimated $30,000,000 of public money over the next five years, will be moves to strengthen general public health services, assistance to work in connection with tuberculosis, mental health, cancer, venereal disease, crippled children, public health training and research, and a program of hospital construction.

Financing the program will be a system of federal grants to the provinces, comprising lump sum contributions and per capita allotments on a progressive scale. The work thus accomplished will furnish the basis for health insurance plans later to be inaugurated. The terms of such insurance have not yet been worked out, but there can be no doubt that any plan adopted will be designed to operate harmoniously with existing systems that are soundly organized. The hospital care scheme of this province, shortly to come into effect, while no doubt retaining its individual identity, would thus become part of a nation-wide protective program.

Financial provision for the program will be asked from the current session of Parliament, the Prime Minister has announced. Although there may be considerable debate as to the details involved in carrying out the scheme, there will be little quarrel from any part of the House as to the general principle involved. Canadians may therefore expect early action on the matter, and consequent relief of what in many localities throughout the Dominion has become a public problem of first magnitude. A plan to broaden needed hospital care, for instance, would be of little avail unless adequate hospital accommodation were provided. And hand in hand with facilities for curing the sick must go provision for education and assistance in the prevention of such ills. These are matters which will be tackled by means of the federal grants. The legislation to overcome them will rank among the most important measures passed by this or any past Parliament.

JUST SAWING

GIVEN A WELL-SHARPENED AND properly-set saw, a man can find a warming satisfaction in bucking a log into lengths for firewood. It is an undertaking that should be pursued leisurely, an operation at once active and contemplative, that should bring the pleasant glow that stems from the easy play of muscles, but which should not degenerate into toil. About it should be an orderliness, a certain precision typified by the even blocks that fall under the measured rhythm of the crosscut.

As work, as the conscious and urgent preparation of fuel, log sawing loses its artistic appeal, can develop into back-breaking drudgery. But while it remains a refinement of leisure, it offers specific attractions. There is a gratifying sense of accomplishment in the mounting pile of blocks. There is a song in the ring of the rakers as they drag out strips of sawdust which crumbles as it dries. There is a tonic in the air the sawyer breathes deeply as the result of his minor exertions.

And because there is an almost automatic swing to sawing, there is time and opportunity for thought or flight of imagination. As the arms and body alternate between lunge and retraction, the mind is free to mull over impressions completely divorced from the undertaking at hand. It is a period of mental vacation when a man can think of anything or nothing at all, and feel that he is, at the same time, accomplishing a useful purpose.

NOTES

Young men were pretty green 48 years ago, but they didn't stop the buggy in front of a girl's home and whistle for her.

Don't worry if "friends" talk about you. What they say doesn't depend on the kind of person you are, but the kind of people they are.

Family And World

(Extracts from an extemporaneous talk by President Truman to the United States National Conference on Family Life.)

WE ARE INTERESTED in the security and the welfare of the family, because that is the fundamental unity on which all governments are formed. Governments are formed for the purpose of being a service to the family as a unit, in our conception of what government ought to be.

For that reason, the welfare and the security of the family are vital to every government in the world.

I am very much interested in the history of government from its very beginning, and I am more than interested in the Government of the United States and how it originated, and the why of its origin.

You see, people came to these shores and they came in family units. North of us the French fur traders went to Canada for a purpose, for the enrichment of themselves and to take things out of the country. Families came to the United States to build homes and to create settlements and to live in peace.

I WILL TELL YOU how they did it. They did it because there was an incentive. They brought with them ideals. They brought with them an idea of God. They brought with them the idea of liberty. And as a result, we have, I think, the greatest republic on which the sun has ever shone.

I am interested, also, in the opening of that part of the country west of the Appalachian Mountains. My ancestors had some interest in that, and made some contribution to it. And some of the things they had to go through with then! And we think we have troubles!

Well, we do, we do. We are having them right now in our modern family setup. We are short of housing. We are studying health programs. We are working on the expansion of social security. All those things have their bearing upon the family and upon the Government of the United States — upon your Government. It is absolutely essential that we solve these problems, just as our ancestors solved them.

OUR HOUSING SHORTAGE is almost a fatal one. For many years I have been attempting to get a housing program. That problem is vital. We have millions of veterans who have returned from fighting for the liberty of this country and of the world who are not able to find homes for themselves and their wives and their children.

Just recently, on a free parking lot in the great city of Washington, it was necessary to have people move on who had been living there indefinitely.

And I remember one case in particular, where a young man and his wife and their baby and the dog had to be ejected from the parking lot down here because they couldn't let them stay there any longer. And they had no place to go. They couldn't find a place in this great city of Washington where a baby and a dog could come and live.

HOW ARE YOU going to raise a family under that condition?

We have got to find a solution to that. And that is what you are here for, to see if you can't help us meet those problems.

One of the worst things we are faced with this year is the fact that we have a presidential campaign, and all the members of the House of Representatives have to be re-elected. That is a part of our system, and it's all right.

But with some of the problems with which we are faced now, it is too bad that that has to come along at this time. I hope that nothing in the world will interfere with our bipartisan foreign policy. That policy—if we expect to get peace in the world, that policy must be carried to its logical conclusion. We are interested, as you know, only in peace in this world and in the welfare of the family units of the world as a whole, as well as our own. That is all I have been trying to get since August 14, 1945, when Japan folded up.

EVERYBODY is interested in peace, and unless we have peace we can have nothing else about which I have been talking.

That we must attain. That we are going to attain. We are on the road, even if it looks rough and rugged and rocky. But we will overcome that situation as we have overcome a great many in our past history.

And we can't let this stump us. We are going to make the United Nations work for peace. That's all we want.

Now you ladies and gentlemen can make a very great contribution to that by helping us solve our own home family problems, which have a bearing on the very thing I am talking about.

IF THIS COUNTRY is happy and prosperous and everybody is at work, and everybody can be happy in his situation, that will contribute to our help which we are trying to get for the recovery of Europe and Asia. And that means peace and prosperity for the whole world.

And there is room enough for everybody in this world, and room enough for everybody to have peace, and to have enough to eat and a place to sleep.

If you will just make a survey of the continent and see the blank spaces where pioneering can still be done, it can be conclusively proved that, if we solve the international problems with which we are faced, and if we keep working at the solution of our domestic problems, all of them can be solved.

Global Survey

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press News Analyst

THIS TRAGIC Arab-Jewish war, which has been allowed to develop through the failure of world statesmanship to carry out its stewardship, poses many speculative problems for those trying to foresee the outcome.

Barring success in the new mediation which the United Nations is undertaking, the conflict bids fair in the long run to produce a decision in the old feud between these two races.

There are several possibilities, among which are these:

EXTENT UNCERTAIN

1. The extent of the invasion of Palestine by the troops of neighboring Arab states is by no means certain. The Arabs are not a wholly united race. There are many acute differences among the various states, and some of the greatest clauses revolve about the reported ambitions of King Abdullah of Trans-Jordan to extend his domain and power. There is always the possibility that the joint invasion might peter out, especially since the Jews have the biggest active army in the Middle East.

2. Some observers feel there is a chance King Abdullah might set up a government in that part of Palestine not claimed by the Jews. Then would follow an uneasy truce, and ultimately the Arabs and Jews would get together and agree on a division of the Holy Land into two states.

3. The invading Arabs might surround the new Israel and then settle down to guerrilla tactics which would be calculated to create an economic pressure to put the Jewish government out of commission. However, this scheme would seem to involve a lot of wishful thinking, since it is premised on the far-fetched idea that the Jewish people of the United States and other countries would get tired of maintaining the Jewish state under such adverse circumstances.

PROSPECTS GOOD

Present prospects of the Jewish state are regarded by many military observers as good. The Jewish army is said to total 50,000 or more trained men who are fairly well equipped. It will take a powerful attacking force to beat them.

The Arabs, on the other hand, are attacking under difficulties. As this column pointed out earlier in the week, their problem of supplying their armies will be great. So taking it all in all, the Jews have much justification for the optimism they are displaying.

There remains one other grave possibility. Should the Jewish-Arab warfare be bitter and protracted, there must always exist the danger that another world war might develop from it.

Armies Conquer—So Do Ideas

By JOSEPH LISTER RUTLEDGE

THERE are people who confidently believe that we are frightening ourselves unnecessarily with all the talk of another war. We would like to believe they are right.

PLAUSIBLY ENOUGH

They argue it plausibly enough. They say: "If Germany and Japan couldn't defeat us, what chance has Russia with her lesser resources and technical know-how?"

There is just one flaw in this reasoning. What the Russians are trying to do is not the same thing as Germany and Japan tried to do.

True there is a good deal of similarity in the aims of Russia today, and Germany of yesterday. There is the same dream of power, the same urge of world dominion — the "place in the sun." But there is also a difference.

Germany wanted to dominate a world by arms, and Japan wanted to dominate the East, and quite possibly the world, by arms. That meant going out and beating armies. In the end, because of our technical ability and the production-line-speed with which we developed machines, we survived, but only just survived.

Russia's dream is different. It is no less imperialistic. It is not without confidence in arms. But it does not plan to impose Russia on the world, as Germany planned to impose herself.

There is no Russia-over-all attitude in Russia's plan. Poland can remain Poland. Czechoslovakia can retain the tattered garments of nationhood. Finland is to be free and independent. They can have their puppet government, if they think as they are told.

It is a far easier thing, and far more potentially dangerous, to export ideas than to export armies. It is easier to move a nation to fight armies than to move it against intangible ideas.

LOSING THE BATTLE

But let us lose enough of these battles against these sinister ideas, and we will have lost already the battle against armies. We have seen it happen. We should know.

Gandhi Tradition With A Difference

Indian Information Service

WHEN EARL MOUNTBATten of Burma relinquishes the office of Governor-General of India next month, his successor will be Sri Chakravarty Rajagopalachari, more familiarly Rajaji, who, at 69, has been one of the most distinguished representatives of the Indian National Congress for the last 40 years. He was a close and intimate associate of Mahatma Gandhi and in many ways his confidante. While a staunch Congressman, C.R. or Rajaji, as he is called, has been a fearless advocate of his views and has not been afraid to differ from the official Congress policy.

POLITICAL HISTORY

Rajaji has been general secretary to the All India National Congress and a member of its working committee for many years. In 1932 he officiated as Congress president for a short while. After general elections in 1937, he became the first elected Prime Minister of Madras, which position he resigned in 1939, in pursuance of a Congress directive on the outbreak of World War II.

In 1942 he differed from the official Congress policy over a Congress League settlement and resigned from Congress. He played an important part in the Gandhi-Jinnah talks in 1944. In 1946 he was nominated member of the Congress working committee.

In September, 1946, he became member of the interim government in charge of industries and civil supplies. Since August, 1947, he has been Governor of West Bengal and during Earl Mountbatten's absence in November, 1947, he officiated as Governor-General for a fortnight.

He is an accomplished speaker and popular writer in Tamil.

TRIBUTES

In tribute to India's Governor-General designate, C. Rajagopalachari, the British edited Statesman in a leading article said recently: "Though in some things he is or was very conservative, he has an almost unique reasonableness. He is above all an ethical person. His sense of values though not uncritically Gandhian—his independence of outlook has been exemplified on at least one famous occasion—resembles the Mahatma's."

Describing the warm reception in London of the news of Sir Rajagopalachari's appointment, Reuter's political correspondent says: "The penetrative insight of India's elder statesman has long been admired in Britain." He quoted Lord Pethick Lawrence, who had headed the cabinet mission to India as Secretary of State, as saying: "I am delighted to hear the announcement. Rajaji is recognized as one of the wisest of India's great statesmen. He will be a worthy successor to Earl Mountbatten. That in itself is the highest praise."

HEAVY TAXING

Financial Post

With heavy contributions to two world wars in less than two generations Canadians must be prepared to pay substantial taxes for a long time to come. But on this very account the country cannot afford any sort of indiscriminate tax policy that in actual effect may "kill the goose that lays the golden egg."

FORCED ADOPTION

Edmonton Journal

Field Marshal von Rundstedt, long a prisoner of war in Britain, has come briefly and surprisingly into the news by his refusal to go home. The marshal apparently fears assassination if he returns to Germany—he is supposed to be repatriated next month, along with other high-ranking prisoners—and he insists on staying in his prison camp.

Altogether the British government has had its troubles with von Rundstedt. Back in 1940, the great problem was to keep him out of Britain; now it is to get him out.

HEEDING THE NORTH

Windsor Star

It may seem like a waste of money to excavate old Eskimo sites, or to study how the Indian lives his primitive way. But, the Eskimo and Indian have lived in the North a long time; they can tell us some things which will help the white man live there.

Canada, with a sparse population, has paid too little heed to the North. With ample land and opportunities in the more southern part of the country, about the only thing which took men in the far northern reaches has been the lust for gold, or for other precious metals that could be exchanged for gold.

NAMING IT

Brandon Sun

In Hudson County, New Jersey, because of a labor union rule, six U.S. marines were not permitted to carry to its grave the coffin of a Marine Corps private killed in the fighting on Iwo Jima. Instead, the union insisted that the pallbearers be professionals—at $4 a head. For $24 the union was willing to deprive a man who died for his country of his full final honors. As a special concession, the union did permit the marines to hold a flag over the grave while the coffin was lowered.

The name of the union is the United Funeral Chauffeurs and Helpers Union. It could be given a shorter name more appropriately.

Conditions Which Caused Rise Of Hitlerism Reviewed

"The same conditions are developing here as developed in Germany before Hitler came to power," Fritz Mueller-Sorau, who was interned by the Nazis in a concentration camp before the start of World War II, told members of the Lions Club Friday.

"You must be very aware and very careful of these conditions," he warned.

Specifically he named unemployment, fascism and intolerance as unhealthy conditions which provide a breeding place for undemocratic elements.

"We have a tendency to disregard people who are attacking minor groups around us—Jews, Negroes, Catholics. We don't worry if they don't touch us personally. But we should remember, whether we like it or not, that we are olr brother's keeper."

Reviewing conditions in Germayn prior to the rise of the Hitler regime, the speaker turned to the later part of the 19th century when Germany was industrialized. This, he declared, was the start of all the trouble.

Germany became industrialized and then had to fight with other world powers for world markets. This trade conflict, he said, was a direct cause of World War I.

INFLATION

Conditions were very bad in Germany during the war, he said, and continued to grow worse even after the war ended. Inflation came.

"Inflation runs away with you until you don't know what has happened."

When the mark was finally stabilized in 1924, Germany enjoyed a few short years of prosperity. Then the depression came. Between six to seven million German workers were put out of their jobs.

"Such conditions were fertile grounds for any movement which promised improved conditions," Mr. Mueller-Sorau said.

Many Germans at that time were anti-Semitic, so Hitler blamed the troubled times on the Jews, the speaker noted.

He did away with all trade unions, split the church into two camps and abolished all free-thinking groups.

"It happened in Germany because the people were indifferent. It could happen here. But it must not."

The speaker was introduced by Dr. Clifford Carl, and was thanked by Walter Rothe.

The word Hussars, meaning cavalry, comes from the Hungarian husz, meaning 20, as every 20th house had to furnish a man for the cavalry corps of Matthias I of Hungary in 1458.

Adjudicators Praise Young Victoria Pianists

Dr. Gordon Slater and Sidney Harrison, adjudicators at the Vancouver Musical Festival, were impressed by the playing of young Victoria pianists during the piano classes held this week. In the Bach open class the first place went to Shirley Anderson and the certificate to Marilyn Bacon. In the Bach class under 16 first place went to Janice Bacon.

In the class for two pianos under 18 first place went to Janice and Marilyn Bacon and second to Vivian and Muriel Trimble, the test piece being "Scherzo in E Minor" (Mendelssohn).

The award for the piano duo open went to Shirley Anderson and Marilyn Bacon. All the forementioned were pupils of Miss Una Calvert.

Hundreds Of Prospectors Seeking Uranium In Canada

OTTAWA (CP)—A half century after the Yukon gold rush of '98, hundreds of prospectors are combing Canada's soil for uranium—the new glamour metal in the storied realm of mining—and several private firms are nearing the production stage.

The hunt for this major source of atomic energy has hit its stride in many parts of the country two months after the government had thrown the field open to private individuals.

Spurred by a government-guaranteed minimum price—$2.75 a pound for uranium exide, f.o.b. rail—for the next five years, it is a hunt broken into three phases by regulations of the Atomic Energy Control Board. The board is guardian of the largest known uranium deposits in the western hemisphere:

1. No special order is needed for prospecting as long as no minerals other than samples for analysis and hand samples are removed. Hundreds of prospectors are engaged in the search.

In one week, more than 100 chunks of black, heavy minerals that had given radioactive reactions were mailed to geological survey headquarters of the Mines Department for assay. Others go to provincial laboratories.

2. Specific orders are needed for exploration by diamond drilling, surface work, test pitting and preliminary underground work. A relative few—"not in the dozens"—have passed into this stage.

3. Further orders are needed for mining. So far, no private firms have entered this phase, but several are getting near the edge and one is very near," officials said today Most are in the Northwest Territories, site of the government's pioneering Eldorado mine on Great Bear Lake.

Prospectors may find uranium anywhere, even rich deposits—but rarely in quantities that would justify commercial exploitation. They wander across Canada with their battery-powered, portable Geiger counters, complicated devices equipped with amplifiers. They count clicks with excitement when radio-activity is near.

2 Trapped 60 Hours In Mine, Rescued

SHAMOKIN, Pa. (AP)—Grimy, bedraggled and sleepy, two exhausted miners were rescued early today from a flooded coal pit. They were trapped Wednesday afternoon by water rushing in from a nearby abandoned mine.

Edward Heck, 42, and Peter Gorton, 35, both of Shamokin, were taken to hospital for their first food in more than 60 hours, then bathed and put to bed. Both were physically unharmed.

They said they believed their companion, Charles Bashore, 42, was trapped in the lowest part of the mine by the inrushing waters and had no chance to escape.

But rescue workers continued the long task of bailing out the water-logged mine in the flickering hope Bashore might still be alive.

The incident recalled the Moose River Mine rescue in April, 1936, when three Toronto men were trapped in an abanonded Nova Scotia gold mine. Two were brought out alive after Stellarton, N.S., draegermen had worked more than a week to tunnel their way towards the trapped men. The third man died before the rescuers reached him.

Mr. Irvine did not explain the outlet he had in mind. In the past there have been suggestions that a railway should link the Peace River area with the Pacific Great Eastern Railway in British Columbia.

Whisky Shipments From B.C. Tumble

A sharp curtailment in the exports through B.C. ports of whisky is noted in a preliminary report on 1947 by the Provincial Bureau of Economics and Statistics.

In 1946 there was shipped through B.C. ports 1,024,992 gallons of whisky valued at $7,185,583. In 1947 these exports were down to 215,362 gallons, valued at $2,374,160.

The big curtailment came in purchases of whisky by the U.S. In 1946 these purchases accounted for $6,145,233 of the total while in 1947 U.S. purchases totaled $1,304,333.

While U.S. has bought less whisky from B.C., shipments through B.C. ports have been extended to many countries with the resumption of world trade. The report shows more than a dozen new consumer nations, against the loss of three or four.

In both 1946 and 1947 the Philippines were the second largest consumer of whisky leaving this province. Last year whisky left this province for 33 nations.

Shipments of gin from B.C. likewise fell sharply in 1947. While in 1946 the value of these exports was placed at $241,001 the 1947 value was down to $54,533. As in the case of whisky, the number of purchasing countries increased.

Miss M. Baird Reports By Letter On Ottawa Meeting

First-hand impressions of the annual meeting of Victorian Order of Nurses in Canada, which took place at Ottawa in April, were written by Miss Marjorie Baird, Victoria superviser, who attended as delegate, and were read at the monthly meeting of the board of management.

Miss Baird's letter described in detail the various sessions of the meeting, gave excerpts from the speeches of several Canadian health authorities, and reported many constructive suggestions for the local V.O.N. board on such matters as relationship between the Order and health units; ways of stimulating and maintaining board members' interest and activity; transportation; municipal grants; co-operation with other community voluntary welfare services; insurance coverage, and modern methods of publicity.

In her monthly report, Miss E. Riddell, acting superviser, stressed the large number of cancer and chronic visits made and emphasized need for early treatment and public education on cancer.

Total number of visits during April were 1,478, including besides the 448 cancer visits, 358 to medical and surgical cases, 235 instructive, 392 to mothers with new babies, 40 to expectant mothers; total attendance at prenatal cases was 44.

Miss Riddell announced that Miss Caroline Farina of Kamloops had joined the staff. Miss Farina, since her discharge from the R.C.A.M.C. which she joined in 1944, had had wide experience in psychiatric and tuberculosis work. Nurses on the V.O.N. staff attended the annual meetings of the Registered Nurses' Association of B.C. recently.

D. Decker, executive director of the Community Chest, gave a short talk on the subject of membership fee collection, which was under discussion at the meeting.

Col. R. Braide reported as delegate to the Canadian Welfare Council.

Liberal Women Hear Rev. Hills

"It is not Communism itself that we have to fear so much here in Canada," said Rev. William Hills, B.A., in his talk to members of the Liberal Women's Forum yesterday afternoon, "but rather continued apathy and an indifference on the subject of government and politics."

The title of his talk was "The Responsibility of Women in Politics," and he pointed out that it was in dispelling this apathy that women could contribute a great deal to improvement of political standards.

"If women were to take a greater interest in politics, I guarantee that men would follow their example and resume their interest," he said, and as an example pointed out that few people actually knew enough of the much-discussed Bill 39 to talk of it and explain it, intelligently.

Rev. Hills spoke of the typical Canadian audience at a political meeting, "distinguished by their dignity and utter deadness."

"I call it intellectual cobwebism," he said, "and consider it a reason for lack of vigorous leadership in our democratic politics."

"To combat the menace of Communism we must have vocal champions of democracy, for ideas and words are full armaments of war. I believe in the power of speech," he said, and recalled the speech of Hitler, Churchill and Roosevelt and their power to move their people during the war.

"We must make every conceivable use of the power of communication of thought to champion democracy, by translating our own thoughts of democratic principles into words."

Mrs. Blair Reid, Mrs. F. E. Dowdall and Mrs. J. Wilson gave reports of the Provincial Conference of Liberal Women in Vancouver.

Mrs. J. L. W. Price Reviews University Club Activities

One of the highlights of the year for members of the Victoria University Women's Club was the International Conference held here November 15, reported Mrs. J. L. W. Price in outlining club activities during the past year in her report at the home of Dr. Olga Jardine.

Nine Pacific coast clubs were represented at the conference and problems of common and international interest were discussed. American representatives spoke at a luncheon, and guests at a buffet supper were addressed by Mrs. Ralph Plaat, Canadian Federation president.

Activities included the provision of a library for the foster home, and individual members have sent handiwork material for the girls there.

A sonata recital was sponsored last spring, with proceeds sent to aid university women overseas and to assist the two local artists.

As its share in educational reconstruction, the club sent books to Germany. Members assisted with food for Britain tag days and in packing clothing for Britain.

L. W. Makovski, who spoke on International Trade Organization, and Willard Ireland, whose subject was "British Columbia, a Study in Parallelisms," were two interesting speakers at regular meetings.

Others who addressed the club were Mrs. H. Hodson, who reported on the International Federation of University Women Toronto conference, and Dr. Irene Clearihue, Miss Hattie Staghall and Mme. L. G. d'Estrube, who told of their travels in Europe. Miss J. E. M. Bruce, and Mrs. Ross Napier were also guest speakers.

A new study group on French language and culture formed this year has been convened by Mme. L. G. d'Estrube, and others on International Relations and on Books for Children are headed by Mrs. Butterfield and Miss M. James.

Mrs. Price thanked officers and conveners of the club for their help during the year and in closing paid tribute "to our first president, Mrs. H. E. Young, may we give our congratulations on her success as president of the University Extension Association," she said, and concluded "whether it be in Teachers' Federation, Home Economics Association, B.C. Indian Handicraft Week, United Nations Society executive, Boards of Art Centre, Recreational Council or in many other local organizations, we find their leadership and abilities outstanding."

Miss Margaret Crummy in her treasurer's report stated that the total bank balance amounted to $731.77.

Of this amount a sum of $84.38, realized from the play "You Can't Take It With You," sponsored by the club for one night, will be sent to European Relief.

The university women's scholarship was given to Miss Kathleen E. J. McEwen, and another bursary will be presented in the fall.

Officers were elected later in the afternoon, and Dr. Elsa Van Dien addressed the club. Her subject was "Holland is more than Windmills and Tulips."

A tea was held following the meeting with Mrs. J. F. K. English in charge of refreshments.

Rotary Auxiliary Luncheon Meeting

Campbell River Getting 'New Look'

Campbell River, one of Vancouver Island's mightiest streams, is getting the new look as contractors proceed with the British Columbia Power Commission's huge John Hart Development.

The stately head dam at what used to be Irene Pool above Elk Falls now is fully completed and visitors may drive their cars over the 26-foot-wide concrete highway atop the dam which rises 85 feet above the original river level. The new 660-acre lake created by the head dam is at full water now and some of the water which previously went over Elk Falls is going into the 12-foot pipeline which carries it to the two 25,000 horsepower turbines.

Upstream from the head dam work is being speeded on the construction of the Ladore Falls dam which will raise the level of Lower Campbell Lake 58 feet and inundate the famous Forbes Landing Hotel.

The river has been made to leave its old bed and now flows underground through a tunnel 1,500 feet long and 30 feet in diameter. The tunnel, however, is only a temporary location for the river. The coffer dam which presently diverts the river through the tunnel will be removed when the Ladore Falls dam is completed and the river will be returned to its old bed. But the held-back waters will bring Lower Campbell Lake to Ladore Falls.

All these changes are part of the current $13,400,000 project to put Campbell River to work and carry its power to the various communities of Vancouver Island. The present project will provide 100,000 horsepower. Eventually the development may be extended to 150,000 horsepower.

The head dam provides the necessary 400-foot head to turn the turbines located in a powerhouse below Elk Falls.

The Ladore Falls dam will store sufficient water to assure an adequate year-round supply to turn four 25,000 horsepower turbines, despite fluctuations in the flow of the river during winter and summer.

Catholic Church In Cowichan Area Nearly Completed

LAKE COWICHAN—Services are now being conducted in the new St. Louis, Roman Catholic Church, here. There is still some finishing work to be done. The exterior will be finished in stucco, on the upper part and the lower, in brick siding.

The new church is the first Roman Catholic church building in this area. Previously services weer held in private homes.

The site of the present church was selected in June, 1947. Situated to the west of the village, overlooking Lake Cowichan, with its Cross visible from many points, the edifice is serving the spiritual needs of the 45 families here, at Meade Creek, Mesachie Lake and Honeymoon Bay.

The resident priest is Father J. J. Cyr, S.M.M., formerly of Sidney and Saanich.

A Catholoc Ladies' Auxilary has been formed. They will hold their first bazaar and tea, in the Community Hall, May 29.

The church proper measures 30 feet by 60 feet and seats well over 100. Eight large windows in the Roman style, light a single nave with its two rows of pews. The height of the walls on the inside is 16 feet with the apex of the rounded ceiling reaching to 24 feet.

Lodge Votes $90 For Children

LAKE COWICHAN—Order of the Royal Purple Lodge No. 90 voted a second $50 donation to the Save the Children Fund for this year, at their meeting, held in the community hall here.

Last year this lodge sent $126 to Supreme Lodge for the Save the Children Fund, it was reported.

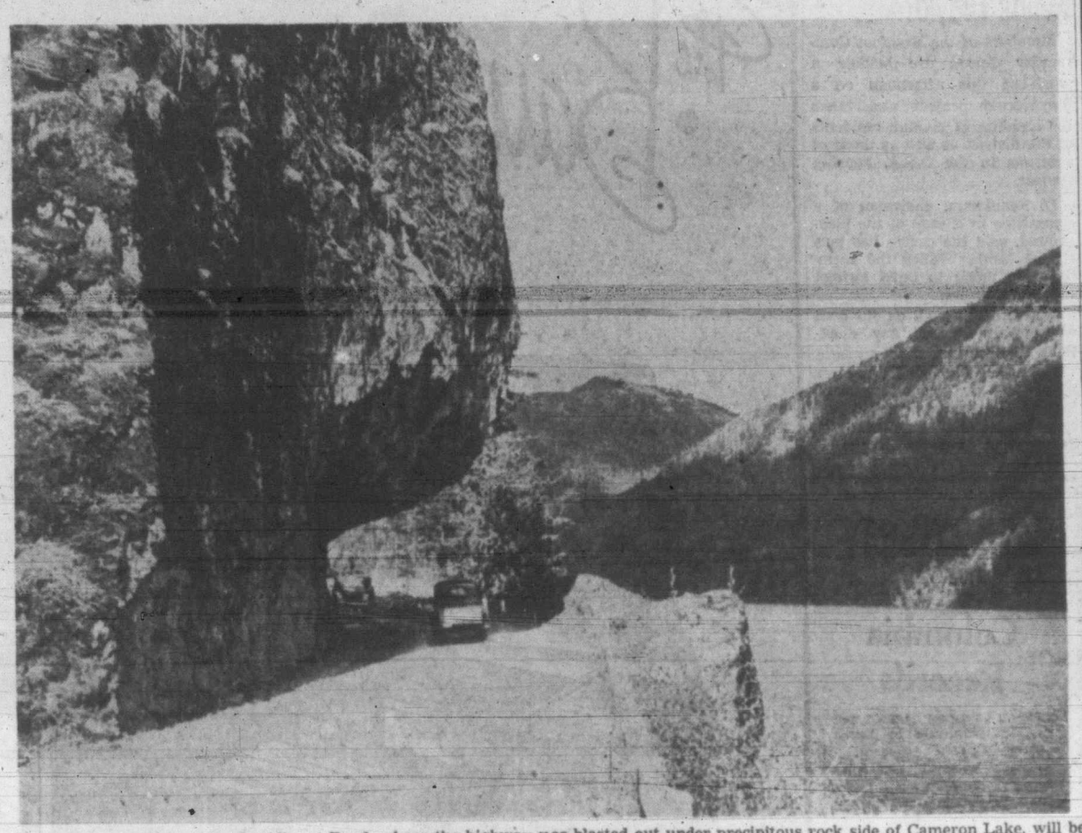
Work Progresses Slowly On Alberni Road



This familiar landmark on the Alberni Road, where the highway was blasted out under precipitous rock side of Cameron Lake, will be preserved as the rebuilding of the road between Parksville and Cathedral Grove is completed.

Rain storms during which fish fall with the rain have been recorded, but it is a rare phenomenon caused when the centre of a tornado exercises a powerful updraft which sucks up the fish.

—Photos by George N. Y. Simpson

Construction crews prepare for a big blast on the Parksville side of the overhanging rock. The 100-foot-high rock wall will be blasted away, bringing down about 5,000 tons of rock. The whole project, held up by bad weather and the necessity of keeping the road open for traffic, is expected to be completed by the end of September.

Pro-Recs Present Annual Display

Color was the keynote of the annual display of Victoria Pro-Recs, held Friday night in the Victria High School gymnasium.

The display got under way with a mass parade of costumed Pro-Rec members.

Folk dancing, tap dancing, physical drills and tumbling were features of the evening's program. The women's section performed under the direction of Mrs. Daisy Goodspeed, while the men's gym squad performed under Ed Kelter.

A Vancouver acrobatic team, led by Dot Ballantyne, was an added attraction.

Most popular number with the audience was the father, mother and daughter acrobatic number by Larry and Verna Moore and their five-year-old daughter Darline. The youngest Pro-Rec member in the entire Dominion, Darline performed cartwheels, handstands and other gymnastic feats with complete ease.

Commons Approves Romania, Hungary, Italy Treaties

OTTAWA (CP)—External Affairs Minister St. Laurent said Friday in the Commons he doubts Britain will ever again sign treaties on behalf of all Commonwealth countries.

Since the First World War the Commonwealth nations have been signing treaties as sovereign countries, he said. Some people did not like the change, but "I don't think we are apt to retrace the steps which brought it about."

The minister spoke before members gave second and third reading to a bill authorizing the federal cabinet to implement the peace treaties with Italy, Romania, Hungary and Finland.

T. L. Church, P.C., Toronto-Broadview, said it was not good policy for the Commonwealth to sign separate treaties. Russia and the United States could not understand this procedure, which made it difficult for Britain to obtain agreement.

Canada was just a minor state as far as the peace treaties were concerned. If the Dominion had stood behind the mother country, the United Kingdom would not have become a second-rate power.

Solon Low, Social Credit leader, asked if the government plans to establish consular services in Romania and Hungary so people there with relatives in Canada can apply for permission to move to Canada.

Mr. St. Laurent said the lack of consular service had not slowed up the movement of immigrants. The immigration department was expanding its overeas facilities as quickly as possible.

SUBJECT:

A Widow's Dilemma

A widow consulted a Vancouver lawyer about her deceased husband's Will and Estate. She had some minor children.

The Will had been made on a printed Will form but had not been properly witnessed and was of no value. Two-thirds of the estate had to be deposited in Court and administered by the Court for the minor children, and an Administrator's Bond had to be provided. All of this involved expense and delay—and the widow had to go to work.

The cost of making a proper Will in such a case would probably have been quite nominal.

IT IS WISE TO TAKE CARE OF YOUR EYES

(A series of articles to help you preserve your sight. Watch for them each week.)

Can parents do anything to protect the eyes of their children? Yes, a great deal. Don't tax the young eyes by allowing them to look too long at small, close objects. If your child likes to read, make sure the print is not too small. If your child likes looking at illustrated books, make sure the paper has not a glossy finish, for glare is a bad enemy of the eyes. Provide plenty of light—indirect is better than direct—for home study and reading. Remember, it is wise to take care of your eyes.

Price Rises Since 1939 Fail To Equal Pace After World War I

MONTREAL (CP)—So you think the cost of living is high!

An analysis published today by the International Labor Office at Montreal reveals that prices throughout most of the world rose more gradually after the start of World War II than after the start of the First World War.

In 15 of 21 countries studied, the index of food, clothing and other basic household expenses rose more sharply from 1914 to 1921 than between the years 1939 and 1948.

In only six of the 21 countries—France, India, Brazil, Chile, Peru and Spain—did prices climb more rapidly during the latter period.

Using 1939—the start of World War II—as one base year, and 1914—The start of World War I—as the other base year, the I.L.O. survey reveals the comparative price situation approximately three years after each war.

In the United States, the cost of living at the end of February, 1948, was 69 per cent above the 1939 index. In 1920, a 100 per cent rise had been registered over 1914, but this figure dropped to 78 per cent in the recession year 1921.

Living costs in Canada at the end of March, 1948, were 49 per cent above those in 1939. In 1920, prices were up 90 per cent over the start of the First World War. This figure fell to 52 per cent during the 1921 recession.

In Great Britain, where price controls still are in effect, a 29 per cent increase in living costs occurred between 1939 and July, 1947, as contrasted with a 155 per cent increase between 1914 and 1920. The 1948 figures are based on a new price index and are not comparable with 1939.

In France (Paris only), at the end of March, 1948, prices were nearly 14 times those of 1939, whereas in 1921, costs were a little less than three times those at the start of the First War.

Braefoot Group Builds Playlot

Members of the Braefoot Community Centre are holding a work-bee this afternoon on a playground project undertaken for children of civilian residents of the district as well as those of veterans in the D.V.A. housing project.

D. Frankham, chairman of a committee in charge of the playground, said the centre has purchased lumber which the members are using to build swings and teetertotters.

"We're doing it all on our own without asking for any donations," he said.

The proprietor of a store on the project has donated property for the playground which is situated on Braefoot Road between Salmon and Andrews Streets.

Few people remember it, but Elia Kazan, who directed "Gentleman's Agreement," first came to Hollywood as an actor via the Broadway stage. He was signed by Warner Brothers to appear in "City of Conquest." He was inclined to overact for the camera, so on the advice of director Raoul Walsh he sought out George Raft for some hints on underplaying. Kazan asked Raft how he did it. Raft whispered:

The Book the World Has Waited for

Churchill's Memoirs

Entitled "The Second World War"

Vol. 1—"The Gathering Storm"

Few have had such a grasp of history or played so large a part in making it as the great statesman, Mr. Churchill. This book, probably the first of five, covers the period of the false peace and the growing challenge of Germany, follows throughout the war and finally to the eve of Dunkirk, at which point Hitler seemed on the threshold of victory, and Churchill became Prime Minister. The words in which this tale is related are as gripping and well chosen as those forming his most famous speeches. Page after page of this book will become permanent contributions to English literature. This book stands alone as a unit, distinctive and unique.

Athletics In Real Horatio Alger Victory

Archie Wilson's Home Run In 9th Beats Yakima; Many Fans Miss Finish

Never leave a ball game until the last man is out. That famous saying struck home at a lot of Victoria fans today following the Athletics' sensational 15 to 13 victory over Yakima Packers in their Western International League battle Friday night. It had a real Horatio Alger finish as centre-fielder Archie Wilson lined a home run over the centre-field fence, with two mates aboard, and two men out to end a brilliant comeback in a blaze of glory.

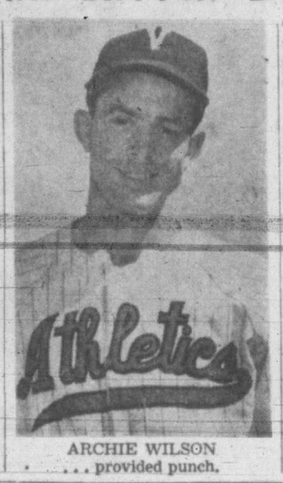
If Wilson hasn't a sore back today he should have, after all the slaps he took from team-mates who clustered around the plate to extend the glad hand as he trotted home. Majority of the fans were as limp as a frost-bitten dahlia. And so were the A's for the first six innings.

Win boosted the Athletics back into a fourth-place with Yakima and Wenatchee, half a game back of the third ranking Salem.

Fielding a makeshift line-up the A's appeared to have kicked away the game in the early innings. Bob Koraleski was called on to fill in for the sick Paul Jones at first base and Jack Palmer took over the catching duties with Sal Recca nursing an injured hand. When, the game appeared lost Palmer was shifted to his regular spot at second base and Gil Hawkins went behind the plate.

GREAT SPIRIT

All the credit in the world must be paid the A's for their fighting spirit. Despite the fact they were down 11 to 5 after six innings the boys never quit, being determined to make a fight of it and their courage paid off dividends.



ARCHIE WILSON
. . . provided punch.

Here's the picture of that ninth inning climax. With one away Charlie Balassi singled to centre for his fourth hit of the night. Del Owens was sent in to pinch hit for pitcher Al Goot and drew a walk. Mike Dalton grounded to the pitcher and all hands were safe when pitcher Drilling delayed his throw to second. Sal Recca, batting for Hawkins, was a strike-out victim.

Jack Palmer kept the rally alive by dropping a single into short left field to score two runs. Wilson strolled to the plate and lined the first pitch out of sight as the crowd went into a near-panic. The uproar was terrific.

Goot, third Victoria pitcher to see action, received credit for his first win of the season. He earned it the hard way, taking over from Dick Walkingshaw in the sixth who had relieved starter Joe Blankenship in the same inning. Garth Ford, Yakima's number one flinger, started but left in the eighth, after being clouted hard and having trouble with his control. Bob Drilling, who replaced him, was charged with the defeat.

On the basis of earned runs Athletics should have won by the one-sided count of 11 to 1. Frank Cirimele's error gave the Packers their first run in the third, Mike Dalton's boot allowed Yakima a four-run rally in the fifth and Blankenship's wild throw to second on a perfect double play ball allowed the Packers five unearned runs. In the seventh Goot kicked around a bunt and Yakima pushed over another couple of unearned tallies.

Athletics moved into an early 3 to 0 lead in the first inning, featured by Babe Jensen's line double to deep left. In the sixth the Victoria club scored two more with Jensen again in the limelight by clouting a triple to deep right. Koraleski's booming triple over the left fielder's head with the bases loaded highlighted Victoria's four-run uprising in the seventh.

Balassi with four for five, including a triple, led the Athletics at the plate. Big Gene Thompson smashed a home run and single to top the Yakima stickers. His circuit blow came with two aboard during the Yakima four-run spree in the fifth.

In other games last night Bremerton edged Wenatchee 4 to 3 and 2 to 1 and Tacoma eased by Spokane 3 to 2.

Sports Mirror

By PETE SALLAWAY

WHILE officials of the seven other clubs in the Western International League are bemoaning the loss of so many games through unseasonal weather directors of the Victoria Athletics are keeping their fingers crossed. One of the best advertisements of the fine climate enjoyed in the capital city is that Victoria is the only team in the circuit which has not yet had a home game rained out. And there's nothing lucky about it. Two years ago the Athletics didn't have a rain-out and last season only lost two games, the final twin bill on the schedule.

* * *

THE rainfall gauges of the Pacific Northwest may have been full to overflowing but there has been just the opposite effect on baseball club cash registers. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been lost by the washouts. It's difficult to total up the number of postponed games in the league — the new postponments come in almost faster than they can be added up—but by May 13 at least 34 games had been rained out. And a lot of those which were played were sandwiched in between showers. Several clubs have had to burn their fields with gasoline in order to play.

* * *

CLUBS are losing thousands of dollars for every canceled game because enthusiasm usually is high in the early season, then wanes until the league race gets hot. The league played to a fraction less than a million paying customers last year. The season is approximately one-fifth over and just about one out of three games scheduled have been rained out. Meanwhile player salaries, park upkeep, travel expenses and a lot of other cash outlays continue. Clubs can't meet expenses with idle turnstiles.

* * *

VICTORIA baseball fans are going to be happy over the return of first baseman Vic Buccola but they will be just as sorry to see Paul Jones leave the club. Ever since Jones joined the A's in spring training he has known his job was in a precarious position and that the club was seeking a replacement. With seldom a word, the quiet likeable fellow who won five battle stars in the Pacific Theatre of operations, buckled down in an effort to make good. His improvement around the base and also at the plate was remarkable. The local fans took Paul to their hearts, giving him every consideration and support. And the big boy appeared to be coming through until the Buccola deal caught up with him. Jones will be given every chance to make good as a first sacker with some other club in the Yankee organization. And after watching Paul we think he will come through.

Gordy Pynn Takes Six Titles To Top School Sports Program

Outstanding figure in yesterday's huge program of school sports throughout Greater Victoria was Gordy Pynn of Victoria High School.

The little blond speedster romped to six victories in the seven open events of the Vic High meet to easily cop the senior boys track title. He captured the 100 and 220-yard sprints and the 120-yard hurdles. In the field events which were held previously, Pynn walked off with the high jump, broad jump and the hop, step and jump.

Three records fell by the boards in the Vic High meet.

Val Brown sped over the 100-yard distance in 12.4 for a new mark for junior girls. Sheila Sinnamon eclipsed the old record of 9.7 for the 75-yard dash with a 9.6 effort, and the House 1 relay team cracked the 440-yard record with a time of 58.6 seconds. The old mark was 59.8.

Audrey Lock won the senior girls championship with a pair of firsts and one second. Earl Barrons copped the intermediate boys crown with Cash Kennedy capturing honors in the girls intermediate division. Ray Lee and Val Brown were junior champions. House 3 won the team championship with 149 points.

OAK BAY

In the Oak Bay High meet Bob Hutchison nosed out Phil Matson for top honors by amassing 16 points, two better than red-haired Phil. Hutchison recorded wins in the 100 yards, hurdles and broad jump with Matson coming home in front in the 440 yards and one-mile events. Denny Wells won the 220, Johnny Foote the high jump and Glenn Smith the shot put.

Art Dawe was in a class by himself in the junior boys division with four firsts and one second for a total of 23 points.

Shirley Knowlton picked up 12 points to Adrienne Taylor's 11 to take the senior girls title while Lynn Newton topped the junior girls section. House 1 annexed the team championship with a 19½-point bulge over House 4.

MOUNT VIEW

Senior laurels in the Mount View sports went to Dale Kilshaw and Jean Fraser. Each captured three firsts for a total of 15 points.

Joan Fisher was the winner in the junior girls aggregate with Beaumont and Sagar finishing in a deadlock for top place in the junior boys division. Cascade House won team honors with Selkirk House in second place. Selkirks won the boys softball and Olympics the girls softball.

MOUNT DOUGLAS

B. Bluff and J. Lohbrunner tied for top aggregate in the girls senior section at Mount Douglas with senior boys honors going to Malcolm with a total of 10 points.

F. Ball with 11 points and F. Bartlett with 10 points were named junior boys and junior girls champions, respectively. Douglas House came out on top in the race for team honors with 101 points, followed by Skeena House and Fraser House.

CENTRAL JUNIOR HIGH

Grand championship at Central Junior High School will be shared by three boys this year. Gordon Hogan, senior winner, Ron Fuller, intermediate victor and Matthews, junior champion, all finished with three firsts for 15-point totals.

For the second straight year Pat Pettigrew copped a girls title. Junior champion last season, Pat took down the intermediate title with 15 points. If she wins the senior section next year she will gain permanent possession of the school championship trophy.

In the senior girls division Margo Wells and Vicki Gardiner tied for first place, each with 11 points. Patsy Wright won the junior girls championship finishing with 13 points.

McKENZIE AVENUE

Winning both the junior boys and girls relays, Hurricanes captured the aggregate championship in the team sports at McKenzie Avenue School. Tornadoes were second with victories in both the senior relays. Tornadoes wound up in third place.

Tee Topics

By BILL WALKER

"Joe Duffer," the average golfer who every so often decides to swear off the game when his scores suddenly begin to soar, should give a thought to the club professional. In fact the need for emphasizing the wisdom of taking professional instruction should be stressed on the beginners.

Golf has apparently entered a boom period and if high handicap players do not have confidence in their club pro there is liable to be a high casualty of golfers in this group due to discontent with their scores. It can be readily seen that this fact will tend to handicap the progress of the game.

CONFIDENCE NECESSARY

However, it is not always the pro who shoots in the low 70's who proves to be a competent instructor. As in any other phase of instruction it takes years of experience to learn to teach. But one answer to the beginner's problem is to have complete confidence in the instructor. Start with one instructor and do nothing else but the things the instructor wishes. Pay no attention to anyone else.

Most noted authorities agree that if the swing of a golfer is not formed in the first few months it is a long and hard pull for the pupil and any subsequent instructor to rectify this fault.

Part of the problem is in the hands of the professionals themselves. It is their job to put across to the public the realization that results will be better with a qualified and competent teacher in command from the very beginning. In short what is needed is a better pro-public relationship.

GOLF RECREATIONAL SPENDING

Recreational spending by tourists should boost golf in Victoria where the game can be played the year round. And the publicity bureau wouldn't go far amiss if it stressed this fact in publicity folders. A tourist is one who could be classed as a man who stops being a production genius to becoming a loafer or a spender. And what spot could be better advertised than Victoria to do just that, be it golfing, fishing or hunting. The trade naturally follows.

U.B.C. Golf Team In Conference Win

SALEM (AP)—A sharpshooting University of British Columbia links team captured the northwest conference gold crown here Friday as eight conference schools clashed in the annual meet.

The Birds rolled to top honors as their four-man team showed 598 strokes for the 36-hole medal play battle. Finishing in second place was College of Puget Sound with a 603 total while Lewis and Clark of Portland was third with 607.

Bob Plommer of U.B.C. was medalist with 70-72—142 followed by Bill Turner, Lewis and Clark, with 144.

$650 Worth Of Prizes For First 1948 Salmon Derby

With the opening salmon derby less than one month away and the appearance of the first springs, directors of the Victoria-Saanich Inlet Anglers' Association met Friday night and set up the machinery for the first rod classic of five on the 1948 schedule.

The derby will be held on Saanich Inlet waters June 13.

The directors were unanimous in their agreement to make the prize list as attractive as last year's and allotted first vice-president Ed Duffin's derby committee $650 for the competition.

Others attending the meeting were Les Dicks, president; Harry Woolston, past president; Chester Alexander, second vice-president; directors Walter Lock, Ed Short and Dan Thomas, secretary John Lund and treasurer Fred Allen, trustees Bill Archer and Fred Smith.

Prizes will be placed in Wilson and Lenfesty's windows a week prior to the competition.

Decision of the meeting was for the secretary to contact all salmon sport-fishing clubs from Cowichan Bay, and including that bay, south for the purpose of forming an affiliated group. Idea behind this is to have a united voice of lower island salmon fishermen to tackle problems which involve their sport in future.

NEW CLAIM SHEET APPROVED

A dream-child of secretary Lund, the directors approved a new-type claim sheet for button fish catches. New one is much smaller than the earlier ones and has an important stub for the angler which proves he or she has caught a button specimen and claimed a button for it. Previously the fisherman did not have this proof and many claims went astray.

Directors were named a committee of the whole to engineer a special event between now and the first derby.

The association this year will press in the proper quarters for a landing wharf to be constructed at the Queen Alexandra Solarium—a desire of the anglers for many years so that they can land fish there for the crippled kiddies. While at one time it was believed the proposal had been approved by the Dominion government, it has not been carried out.

Duffin's derby committee men are Short, Alexander and Thomas.

Dobrey's Car Not Racing Tonight

Field for tonight's weekly auto racing meet at the Langford Speedway will not include Leo Dobrey's hot car from Tacoma. In a wire received last night by promoter Bruce Passmore, Dobrey stated he had been forced to make arrangements to leave immediately for Indianapolis and would not be able to bring his car here.

Tonight's program will get started at 7.30 with the time trials.

11 Players Signed By Toronto Leafs

TORONTO (CP) — President Conny Smythe of the Toronto Maple Leafs kept alive hockey news last night when he announced that 11 players who have been members of two successive Stanley Cup championship teams have signed contracts for the 1948-49 season.

Smythe said he had "absolutely no trouble" in signing the players who are: Ted Kennedy, the new team captain, and his linemates, Vic Lynn and Howie Meeker; Bill Ezinicki, presently playing in United States pro golf tourney; Harry Watson, Joe Klukay, Gus Mortson, Jim Thompson, Bill Barilko, Garth Boesch and goalie Turk Broda.

All 11 players were with the Leafs when they won the Stanley Cup in 1947 and again in 1948.

UPLANDS GOLF

In a field of 24 players, Peggy Bagley captured A class honors in the monthly medal round at Uplands Golf Club Friday with a score of 93-15—78. Mrs. W. J. Cummings won class B with 100-27—73.

Raschi's Three-Hitter Ends Winning Streak

When the lanky New York Yankee right-hander first joined the club late in the 1946 season from Newark of the International League, he made two starts, both against the Athletics and came through with victories.

Last year after being recalled in mid-season from the Coast League, he made one start against the A's and won again.

Friday, manager Bucky Harris called on the 29-year-old pitcher to cool off the torrid A's who barged into Yankee Stadium riding the crest of a 10-game winning streak.

Raschi came through in impressive fashion, shutting out the A's 3 to 0 on three hits. He walked only three and fanned seven.

Carl Scheib, Raschi's opponent, yielded only four hits but two of the blows were homers by Johnny Lindell and Yogi Berra. Lindell broke up the game in the third inning when he lined a 3 and 1 pitch into the left field seats with one aboard.

CLOSE GROUND

The victory moved the Yanks to within four percentage points of the second-place Cleveland Indians and to within a half game of the league-leading Athletics.

Another fine pitching job was turned in by Fred Sanford of St. Louis Browns. Sanford blanked the Tigers 3 to 0 in Detroit on five singles.

Doubles by Al Zarilla and Whitey Platt led to the Brownies' first run in the second inning. Another two-bagger by Pete Layden along with two errors helped the Browns pick up two more runs in the ninth off losing pitcher Fred Hutchinson. The Tigers now have lost their first six starts at home.

Excellent pitching also highlighted activity in the National League.

At Chicago, Russ Meyer spun a four-hitter in shutting out Cincinnati Reds, 1 to 0. The win was his third and his second straight shut-out. Andy Pafko homered for the lone run of the game in the eighth inning off young Kent Peterson who gave up eight hits. The loss was the eighth in a row suffered by the last-place Reds.

St. Louis Cardinals nosed out Pittsburgh Pirates 2 to 1 in a night game at St. Louis with Stan Musial driving in both runs with a fourth-inning homer off Fritz Ostermueller.

The lakes have dropped off this last few days. The weather seems to be the main factor. While it was warm the fishing produced fair catches. Lately this has dropped to almost nil. The rivers have shown better results lately, several nice catches reported, but from all accounts to get them was hard, tedious fishing.

Four Share Golf Lead With 69s; Ezinicki Has 75

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The boss is as good as the best of the hired hands today starting the second round of the $15,000 fifth annual Philadelphia Inquirer golf tournament.

The boss in this case is George Schneiter of Ogden, Utah, smallish, soft-spoken tournment chairman of the Professional Golfers' Association. George fashioned nine-hole scores of 33-36 for a 69 total yesterday, three under par 72 and good enough to share first-round leadership with a trio of golfing hot shots. Tied with him were bantam Ben Hogan of Hershey, Pa., Bobby Locke, the smooth-swinging South African, and Dr. Cary Middlecoff, lanky golfer-dentist from Memphis, Tenn.

Schneiter, as the directing head of P.G.A. tournaments, usually in the past has been too busy with administrative matters to concentrate properly on his playing. Recently he's acquired some "office" help—his office moves with him around the tournament circuit—and he said he thought this helped him to a fine opening round.

Six other golfers bettered par. Bob Hamilton, Landover, Md., had the only 70 in the field of 106 starters, and Eric Monti, Santa Monica, Calif.; E. J. Dutch Harrison, Little Rock, Ark., Lloyd Mangrum, Chicago; Ed Fugol, Pontiac, Mich.; Jack Grout, Harrisburg, and Johnny Palmer, Badin, N.C., came in with 71s. Bill Ezinicki, Toronto Maple Leafs' hockey star, stayed in the running with a 75.

Worrell Hurls Navy To Senior Amateur Baseball Victory

Little Jeff Worrell, ace of the sailors mound staff, pitched five-hit ball after taking over from starter Cazza in the first inning to gain credit for the win.

Losers scored singletons in the first and second innings with the sailors replying with one run in the bottom of the first and one in the third. A two-run rally in the sixth gave the tars the triumph.

Schedule for the next two weeks follows:

Tomorrow—Bombers vs. Pitzer and Nex, Macdonald Park, 2.30.
May 17—Eagles vs. Navy, Athletic Park, 7.

Brentwood Wins, Eaglettes Lead In Women's Division

Though Brentwood Aces moved into the win column for the first time in four starts in the senior A men's softball league last night with a 13 to 4 shellacking of Bluebirds, the big story was in the senior women's tilt.

Ruth Oster, celebrating her birthday, did it up right by tossing Eaglettes into first place in the loop with a 10 to 3 win over Adverts.

Touched for three runs in the first frame, Ruth came back to blank the hard-hitting Adverts the rest of the route.

In the men's tilt, Aces laid the wood to the ball in no uncertain terms as they smashed out 14 base knocks from the offerings of three cabbie hurlers.

FURMESTON STARS

John Furmeston not only pitched the Aces to their first triumph of the year but led the suburbanites at the plate with a home run, triple and double in five trips. He batted in three tallies.

Winners scored two runs in each of the first three innings, five in the fourth and closed out with another two-run effort in the seventh.

In a senior B game Langford nipped Black and White, 5 to 4, while in a women's B section contest Langford took the measure of New Method, 15 to 6.

Rainiers Sweep Doubleheader From Sacramento

Seattle's slow climb from the Coast League cellar had the Rainiers within three percentage points of the first division today.

A double win last night over the Sacramento Solons, 4 to 3 and 6 to 3, while Portland was defeating San Diego, 7 to 0, did the trick.

On a games-behind basis, San Diego and Seattle were on the same level at nine below the top-rung San Francisco Seals. But the Padres stood at .489 with their 22 wins and 23 losses while the Rainiers were at .486 with 18 wins and 19 defeats.

The Seals, running four games ahead of the pack, continued to look like the class of the league. They handed Hollywood's befuddled Stars their fourth straight trouncing last night, 6 to 5, coming from behind with three runs in the eighth to win.

Runner-up Los Angeles slipped a notch as Oakland applied a 9 to 3 shellacking to square their series at two games each.

Putting Bounce In Brooklyn Outfield

Padding of chemical sponge rubber covered with mildew-proof duck is to soften the crash of over-zealous Brooklyn and other outfielders when they go flychasing at Ebbets Field this year. The sections of rubber are 12 feet by 50 inches and an inch thick. Painters are coloring the padded wall. An original idea making the wall too resilient was shelved because of the rebound of balls, which might have necessitated a new ground rule. The injuries suffered by Pete Reiser of the Dodgers prompted the padding of the wall.

Victoria Cougars Set For Grid Clash With Champions

Vancouver Blue Bombers, Canadian junior grid champions, and Victoria Cougars, fresh from a month of strenuous training under the guiding reins of coach Lou Mogul will meet in an exhibition football game at Macdonald Park next Saturday.

Mogul, former Winnipeg grid star, has been quite impressed with the keen enthusiasm and eagerness of the locals in workouts.

The Cougars will use a highly diversified attack Mogul stated today. "If we can't gain on the ground we will take to the air," he said.

An example of the seriousness with which the 28 gridders are taking the new venture into the Pacific Coast Canadian Football League is the fact that they have all been turning out regularly to practice sessions five times a week.

Looking over the team in the month of spring training, Mogul feels that the squad should give a good account of itself. The game will give Mogul and the public a chance to see how the boys perform under fire against the crack Dominion champions.

Mel Patton Gains Recognition For Sprint Record

LONDON (AP)—The International Amateur Athletic Federation Friday accepted the world records set last year by track stars Mel Patton of the United States, Herb McKenley of Jamaica and Mikko Hietanen of of Finland.

Patton, University of Southern Californa track star and chief United States hope in the Olympic sprints here this summer, was listed officially as co-holder of the world 100-yard-dash record.

Patton's time of 9.4 seconds, set last May 24 at Los Angeles, equaled the record first established by Frank Wykoff of the United States in 1930. It has since been tied by Jesse Owens and Clyde Jeffrey of the United States and D. J. Joubert of South Africa.

McKenley, former University of Illinois ace and favorite to win the Olympic 400 meters for his native Jamaica, was recognized as official holder of the world quarter-mile record at 46.3 seconds. Made last June 28 at Berkeley, Calif., the mark cut one tenth of a second off the previous world 440-yard standard set by Ben Eastman of the United States in 1932 and tied nine years later by Grover Klemmer, also of the United States.

Hietanen, Finnish distance star, set a new 15-mile mark of 1.18.48 at Kuopio, Finland, last Aug. 20. Written into the record books it wipes out the previous mark of 1.19.48.6 established by another Finnish star, Erkki Tamila, in 1937.

B.C. Particularly Will Benefit From Health Plans, Says Johnson

Premier Byron Johnson said today that British Columbia would particularly benefit under the federal government's $30,000,000 annual program of grants to help the provinces expand their public health services.

Rough outline of the plan was announced in the House of Commons Friday by Prime Minister King.

Today Mr. Johnson issued the following statement:

"I am indeed gratified to read the announcement by the Rt. Hon. the Prime Minister Mackenzie King of the Dominion government's intention to implement some of the Green Book proposals in so far as they affect health and hospitalization. This will mean much to the provinces, and to British Columbia in particular, in respect to our health and hospitalization programs. I cannot say how great the need is for more hospital accommodation, and I am hopeful that with the Dominion government's assistance, increased accommodation may be accelerated. It is likewise gratifying to me that the Dominion has made this decision since I view it as an earnest of other plans to come. I regard the announcement in the nature of the first step on the part of the federal authorities to fulfill the social security portion of our Dominion-Provincial tax agreement. It will be recalled that last January, and since then, I have made representations to the federal authorities, constantly pressing, not only for the introduction of health grants and financial assistance in connection with the cost of hospital construction, but also for the implementation of compulsory contributory superannuation and readjustment in old-age pensions."

Health and Welfare Minister George S. Pearson, said the plan would not materially affect British Columbia's hospital insurance plan, scheduled to be in operation by next Jan. 1 with collection of premiums to be started about October.

He said that there would be no reduction in the present health expenditures by the province, but the grants would be helpful. They will represent only a small fraction of what was being spent on health services in B.C.

Mr. Pearson indicated that the grants would be used to extend services.

The grants for hospital construction would represent a small proportion of the actual cost of such institutions," he said.

Explains Executions

ATHENS (AP)—Press Minister Michael Alianos said Friday that 1,320 persons sentenced by courts-martial had been executed in Greece since June, 1946. A statement prepared by Alianos said the military executions were for "high treason."

Sikhs Greet India's High Commissioner

A large gathering of Sikhs from Greater Victoria and other parts of Vancouver Island met the afternoon boat from Vancouver Friday to greet Hon. Sardar Singh Malik, India's High Commissioner to Canada, now paying a five-day visit to Victoria. Mr. Malik is shown with his wife, Sardarini Malik, on his right, and his daughter, Miss Harsimran Malik, left.

India's relations with Pakistan are still not satisfactory and Kashmir and Hyderbad present the main problems in settlement of the difficulties, according to India's High Commissioner to Canada, Hon. Sardar Hardit Singh Malik, who is now paying his first visit to Canada since his present appointment.

Mr. Malik, who speaks with a soft, Oxford accent, said the trouble over Kashmir arose from the deliberate aid given by Pakistan in the invasion of the Kashmir which is part of India. Although no Pakistan troops were acknowledged to be participating, there actually were Pakistan officers and men with the invading forces, he said, adding that the Pakistan government claimed these men had deserted the regular army. Others on leave, have joined the invading forces. In addition, supplies are being provided for the invading bands.

India has complained to the U.N. Security Council but, said Mr. Malik, the council has unfortunately not faced the issue.

HYDERBAD PROBLEM

The other problem is the question of Hyderbad, a princely state. He explained that every state, apart from Hyderbad, has joined either India or Pakistan, but this one state is trying to remain independent. India does not feel this is possible as Hyderbad is an "island" in the continent with a population of 16,000,000, with more than 80 per cent wishing to join India. Unfortunately, continued the India High Commissioner, Hyderbad's ruler is a Moslem who is seeking, by terrorization of the population, to prevent the union.

CONTRARY TO IDEALS

This is contrary to India's democratic ideals. The question of which country to join was to have been settled by the people and not by the ruler. The government of India has insisted that the states and provinces should have representative government. According to Mr. Malik, that principle is being violated in Hyderbad and there is no sign of any settlement.

With respect to India's future relationship with Britain and the British dominions, Mr. Malik was not sure what it might be. The question is to be settled by the constituent assembly.

However, Mr. Malik was sure that whatever the future status of India is to be, there will remain a friendly relationship between India and Britain and the Commonwealth.

Present indications are that India will become a republic with a president, perhaps similar to Eire.

In reviewing the present policies of his country, Mr. Malik pointed out that India is essentially democratic and stands for freedom of the individual, as preached and sought by Ghandi and Nehru. There will be no discrimination of caste or creed.

One trouble, however, is that India citizens are sensitive to the treatment they receive outside, and India is not being treated as other dominions are. Mr. Malik mentioned South Africa's attitude as an example.

WITH MORE FRIENDLINESS

In discussing the change in India's status, Mr. Malik said Britain had showed great imagination in dealing with the problem. In India, where her leaders had suffered personally in past years and had become bitter against Britain, these same men now regard Britain with more friendliness. When the British attitude changed, these leaders forgot their bitterness and extended the hand of friendship.

Mr. Malik said India's leaders are socialistic in the sense that they are striving towards achievement of social justice for all. Wholesale nationalization had once been planned but that scheme was modified. At present, India allows existing enterprises to continue as private enterprises, but future development of industries, such as mining, etc., will be nationalized. One of the reasons for this, according to Mr. Malik is India's great need for production.

$3,000,000 To Be Raised By Church For Mission Work

Victoria's United Churches will be asked to raise $30,000 toward a $3,000,000 objective needed for missionary and maintenance work in Canada and abroad.

The B.C. Conference of the United Church of Canada today approved a resolution calling on all its people to share in the work of the church by increasing their contributions annually to reach $3,000,000 by 1950.

The missionary and maintenance committee reported the objective of $2,175,000 for this work was raised in 1947. Increased funds for missionary work was needed because of increased costs and the increasing demands on all churches in Canada and overseas.

The following objective to be reached by 1950 is broken down as follows: Cariboo, $2,000; Kamloops - Okanagan, $16,000; Kootenay, $9,000; Prince Rupert, $4,800; Vancouver, $80,000; Victoria, $30,000; New Westminster, $18,200. The total for British Columbia is $160,000.

The remainder of the objective will be raised by the eight other provinces.

Willows Sprinkler System Too Costly

Installation of a sprinkler system in all Willows fairgrounds buildings, as recommended by the deputy fire marshal, would cost $35,000 and such a move is out of the question, according to an official of the B.C. Agricultural Association.

"The association cannot afford that amount of money and it is ridiculous to expect it to be spent for a seven-day show," the official said.

The association recently sought a building permit for $10,000 repairs on the buildings but has received no decision from Oak Bay Council as yet.

Bail Set In Theft Charge At $1,000

Bail was set at $1,000 by Magistrate H. C. Hall in city police court today for Donald Stancil, Victoria, who appeared before him on a charge of theft.

Charge reads that accused on or about Jan. 30 this year stole a valuable security, a bill of exchange for $25.41, the property of Daniel O. Mills.

He asked the magistrate for right to reserve plea and that bail be set.

Imported Diseased Spuds Ordered Consumed Outside Growing Areas

Every precaution is being taken to prevent potatoes infected with the dread bacterial ring rot which have been brought here from Manitoba from getting into potato-producing areas of the province.

The province has strict regulations which prohibit the importation of these diseased potatoes but there is no way to tell whether the tubers brought here from others provinces have the diseas until they arrive. Recently it was found that several carloads of infected potatoes had been brought here from Manitoba.

The shipments were immediately halted. Since the infected potatoes are still edible they have been directed to lumber and military camps and ships' stores and kept out of potato growing areas of the province.

SHORTAGE ADDS TO PROBLEM

The shortage of seed potatoes makes the problem of preventing the diseased potatoes from getting into the potato-producing areas of the province all the more difficult this year, but plant pathologists feel that satisfactory control is being maintained.

Two years ago three times as many potatoes which were infected with bacterial ring rot were brought into the province and consumed without endangering future potato production.

It is possible for the ground to become infected with the disease even through pealings from the diseased potatoes and also from potato bags.

British Columbia is the only potato-producing area of the North American continent which is virtually free of bacterial ring rot. As a result production of disease-free potatoes for seed purposes has grown considerably during the last few years, markets for the seed being extended into the United States and South America.

A report of the provincial bureau of economics and statistics shows that seed potatoes totaling 184,153 bushels, valued at $357,639 were exported by B.C. last year. They went almost entirely to the U.S. and Argentine, the U.S. taking slightly more than half the total export.

The provincial government, also to encourage the production of seed potatoes, has provided through legislation for the setting up of disease-free seed potato growing areas in which the control of seed and production is even more strict than elsewhere in the province. The first of these areas was set up a month or so ago in the Grand Forks district and it is expected that growers in the Pemberton Valley and elsewhere in the province will take similar steps shortly.

While plant pathologists keep a close check on imports of potatoes for table consumption they are also constantly on the lookout for the disease in potato patches.

Junior Chamber Regional Dues Up

Annual regional dues to be paid by Junior Chamber of Commerce units in B.C. were considerably increased by constitutional amendment at this morning's session of the 1948 Jaycee regional convention.

Minimum charge to be levied against small units was set at $50 and a maximum charge was set at $100. Formerly a minimum of $10 and a maximum of $50 was collected by the regional council.

Place of next year's regional convention will be decided by the incoming executive, it was ruled by meeting chairman M. F. Chapin, when two delegate polls resulted in stalemates.

Three units offered to play hosts to next year's conference, Prince Rupert, Kamloops and Vernon. The Kamloops delegation withdrew its invitation, however, when it appeared likely Prince Rupert would be chosen.

First ballot, showed eight units in favor of having the convention in Prince Rupert and eight in favor of having it in Vernon. A five-minute lobby period was called by the chair in an effort to break the deadlock but the result of the second ballot was the same.

The incoming council's decision will be announced later in the day.

This Week Showed Notable Gains On Leading Security Markets

By CANADIAN PRESS

Stocks rallied significantly in fast action and sharp gains on the leading security markets this week and the resumption of the upward surge attracted wide attention in financial circles since the rally came after only one week of consolidation.

Following the five previous weeks of advances observers anticipated a reasonably extended period of hesitancy, but with the correction recession short-lived, "street" talk centred on a continuation of the strong trends.

Indications of strength were visible on the opening day this week and the pace accelerated to reach a high level Friday both at New York and Toronto. The action centred mainly on the leading stocks among the rails, oils, utilities and steels.

GAINS AT NEW YORK

New York experienced one of the strongest and fastest sessions of the last eight years with more than 3,800,000 shares traded, the largest volume since May 21, 1940. The Associated Press 60-stock composite touched 70.8, a high since Aug. 30, 1946.

C.P.R. was the feature stock for the week on the Toronto exchange, with investors in the United States reported bidding on interest in the large mineral rights holdings of C.P.R. in possible oil reserves. The stock traded heavily and showed an advance of more than $3 for the week. Imperial Oil was another sharp gainer.

Reports early this week from Moscow that the Soviet Union is ready to discuss differences with the United States had a decided effect on trading. Armament stocks were depressed, but other industrials showed good form. Of more immediate effect was the announcement late Wednesday from Alberta that the Leduc oil field was to be closed down until a runway well threatening fire could be brought under control. Western oil stocks showed substantial losses the following day, but recovered in heavy trading Friday and established a new over-all high since January, 1939.

The Toronto exchange's statistics for the week ended Friday gave clear indication of the strong trends. The exchange's index for industrials was up 8.75 at a new high since Sept. 5, 1946. Golds continued weak and the index was down 1.74, base metals exhibited strength Friday, but losses earlier in the week held the index down for a loss of .33. Western oils moved up .77. Volume for the five days was 4,568,000 shares.

Montreal's figures show a volume at 1,455,284; banks were off .09, utilities up .08; industrials up 4.6; combined up 3.3; papers up 22.54; golds off 1.16.

Light Rains Make Oil Gusher's Crews More Difficult

EDMONTON (AP) — A well which under normal conditions would delight oilmen today continued running wild in the Leduc-Calmar sector of the Alberta oil field—with weather a complication.

The provincial government and private companies have joined in efforts to choke off the gusher, Atlantic No. 3. From the wellhead and surrounding ground oil is flowing at the rate of 10,000 barrels a day, more than the 6,000-barrel quota of the entire field.

Drizzles have added to the difficulties of workers, striving to pipe off 75,000-barrel oil lake—covering 40 acres of land around the well—into storage.

Atlantic No. 3 was drilled to completion March 8. It gave trouble immediately. But two weeks ago it became too much to handle, and the Alberta Petroleum and Natural Gas Conservation Board ordered the 60 other producing wells in the field 18 miles south of Edmonton closed down so all possible equipment and facilities could be swung into the battle against the gusher.

PUMP AT WORK

Oil tank cars have been assembled at the Nisku railroad seven miles east of the well, and pumps now are piping the oil off to Nisku at the rate of 12,000 barrels a day.

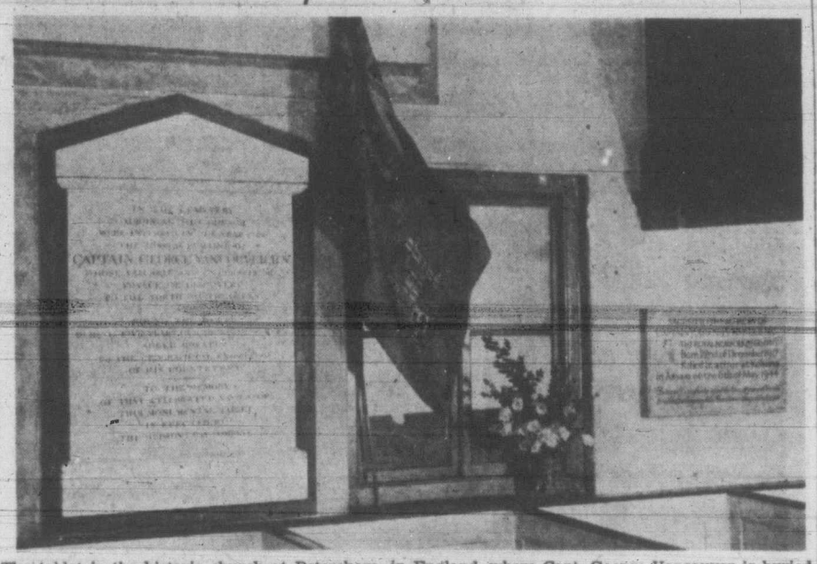
Engineers feel a week could see the lake of oil drained with piping in full swing and an unknown amount of crude pumped back into the ground through well-heads.

Separators have been installed to process the oil which is to be pumped back into the ground.

Two relief wells will be drilled at angles into the bottom of the No. 3 hole.

Apart from the fire hazard, one of the principal worries of oil men has been a lowering of pressure in the stores of natural gas which force oil to the surface. But the general manager of Imperial Oil's producing department, H. L. Haider, said the current flow of gas probably would damage only the immediate Atlantic-held land.

Tablet Honors Memory Of V.C. Hero



The tablet in the historic church at Petersham, in England, where Capt. George Vancouver is buried is shown here. The church was damaged by bombs during the war but has now been restored. Shown near the memorial tablet is another to the memory of Capt. John N. Randle, V.C. Capt. Randle won his V.C. in action at Kohima, Assam, in 1944, his bravery cost him his life. The picture was taken especially for W. G. Whitby of Royal Oak, an uncle of the war hero.

Ottawa To Launch Full Investigation Of Margarine Issue

OTTAWA (CP)—The government will launch a Senate committee investigation into "all questions on margarine" at the beginning of the next session of Parliament. This was announced Friday in the Upper House by Senator Wishart Robertson, government leader.

His statement was the latest development in the margarine controversy which has arisen in the Senate during each of the last three years. Each time a bill to legalize margarine in Canada, introduced by Senator W. D. Euler, Lib., Ont., has been defeated.

"Careful consideration should be given to the proposal of establishing a margarine industry in Canada and its utilization of domestically-produced edible oils," Senator Robertson said.

"Whether or not a future margarine industry and domestic production of edible oils can be undertaken in normal times without tariff protection against foreign competition should be carefully considered, along with its possible effect on the price at which margarine is made available to the consumer."

The Senate adjourned Friday night until June 1, after Chief Justice Thibaudeau Rinfret, deputizing for the Governor General, had given royal assent to 21 bills which had been passed both Houses. Thirteen other bills had already been signed this session.

Before the Chief Justice arrived, the Senate passed the bill increasing war pensions by an over-all 25 per cent.

MR. PILE SUFFERER:

You say there is nothing effective for piles. That's wrong these days. Modern science has the answer in the new internal treatment, PYLTONE PILE REMEDY. The root of pile trouble is internal, far inside the anal tube. To get results that last, the cause must be completely removed. That's why PYLTONE gets worthwhile results in the most stubborn cases. Compounded from special plant oils, gums and balsams (a liquid taken by mouth), it goes directly to the internal cause. These healing agents act at once on those swellings and irritation. We recommend that you will get the results you expect with the first bottle of PYLTONE or your money refunded at once. Now $1.75 at all Druggists.

Commerce Chamber Studies Resolution On P.G.E. Railway

The province-owned Pacific Great Eastern Railway has been subject to much unfair ridicule, Walter S. Miles, president of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce, told chamber directors at a meeting Friday.

"As it consumes a great amount of provincial revenue, it should be of vital interest to everyone and should be taken seriously," he said.

Discussion by chamber directors on the much-discussed P.G.E. came when a letter from the Prince George Board of Trade was read before the meeting. The letter asked the Victoria Chamber of Commerce to support action already taken by the Prince George group, by urging the provincial government to give consideration to reported American offers to buy the railway.

"This board views with alarm the reported disinterest of responsible provincial officials to reported proposals emanating from American sources for the acquisition of the P.G.E., and for the construction of a new railway through British Columbia to Alaska," the communication from Prince George stated.

FULL PUBLICITY

"Our opinion is any such proposals should be given full publicity, and a hearing by the full cabinet," it continued.

Since there is little likelihood of Canadian railways joining with the government to develop the P.G.E., and the country it serves, outside promotion would be welcomed by the people to assure the development of B.C.'s interior.

This development, the letter claims, has been too long delayed.

Directors of the local chamber felt they were not fully acquainted with existing situation. A committee was appointed, therefore, to study the matter, and to bring forth a recommendation as to whether or not the Prince George resolution should be endorsed.

Combat Communism By School Training, Director Advocates

"If we are to successfully combat communism, we must work the same way Communists work," William Clark, chairman of a Victoria Chamber of Commerce committee which is studying the Communist menace to Canada, told chamber directors at a meeting Friday.

"The Communists send their men to school to teach them how to sell communism. We, then, must send our men to school to teach them how to sell free enterprise."

"Some organization with considerable funds (the sum of $50,000 was later mentioned) should arrange to have these schools set up," Mr. Clark said.

The schools, the speaker suggested, would teach the importance of free enterprise and the benefits which the citizens derive from it. The schools would further teach how these lessons could be put over to the public.

Mr. Clark said union men should be selected to attend these schools—"preferable union men who belong to unions which are Communist controlled," he noted.

Those attending the schools would be paid what they would normally receive at their regular jobs.

"Where is the money to do this going to come from?" Mr. Clark was asked.

Price Quotations On Air Waves Discussed

Directors of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce at a meeting Friday expressed themselves to be in favor of having a price tag put on items advertised over the radio.

During discussion of an existing regulation of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which provides that no one shall advertise the price of goods over Canadian air waves, directors found the provision to be "whole discriminatory."

This opinion will be forwarded by letter to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, which is conducting a survey amongst all chambers in Canada on the matter. If the majority of chambers think as the local chamber does, the national organization will press for removal of the price mention ban.

Minister Ordained At Conference

Rev. Percival Mallett, M.A., D.D., was the only candidate ordained at the British Columbia conference of the United Church of Canada here. He is shown being ordained by the laying on of hands by officers of the conference and the minister of the candidate's home church, Rev. S. T. Galbraith of Vancouver. He was introduced to the congregation by Rev. Dr. Norah L. Hughes, Ph.D. Rev. H. M. Rae, M.A., D.D., preached the sermon.

Directors Support Tofino In Campaign For Road

Approval to a resolution submitted by the Tofino Board of Trade, asking that the Dominion government be urged to construct a first-class road from the east coast of Vancouver Island to Tofino, on the west coast, as part of the Trans-Canada Highway, was given by directors of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce at a meeting Friday.

A communication from the Tofino board, read with the resolution, declared it was high time federal officials and the general public became aware of the material resources in and around Tofino. If these resources are to be developed, the communication continued, there must be a way for men to get to them.

As things now stand, Tofino and the surrounding area is accessible only by boat, it was noted.

H. C. Holmes, chairman of an all-island committee which has carried out an extensive study of the road situation, stated it was his belief the Dominion government was not planning any road program while business conditions remain good.

CAN'T GET THEM

For one thing, they can't get the men, he said. And for another, they want to have some work ready should there be any kind of an industrial recession.

He noted, however, that the road requested was of vital importance to the development of the island as a whole, and stressed the value of such a road from a national defence point of view.

Upon his suggestion, the Victoria chamber directors will urge the government to undertake construction of the road "at the earliest practical time."

The chamber directors also approved of a resolution submitted by the Victoria Air Force Officers' Association, which seeks to have an auxiliary air force squadron stationed at Patricia Bay.

Such a squadron, it was noted, would provide employment for 50 men.

World's Hope In Patriots' Faith

By WILLIAM E. GILROY, D.D.

One of the reasons why reforms do not stick and why periods of great moral awakening and religious revival are so often followed by periods of relapse is that reforming zeal is not shared by all and does not seriously affect every phase of life.

Under the influence of the reform wave, those who may not believe in the method or purposes of the reform become subdued and silent. But their attitudes or convictions are not changed. Their opposition is latent, awaiting an opportunity to find expression, and perhaps to effect a counter reform, or revolt.

The influence of Judaism upon the moral, social and religious life of the world has been incalculably great, in itself and as the moral and spiritual background of Christianity. But it is interesting to speculate upon how much even greater that influence would have been had the entire history of Israel always been upon the high plane of Israel's greatest saints, teachers and prophets instead of that history being one of moral rise and relapse.

TURN TO IDOLATRY

The story is that of many of the people turning to idolatry and the anti-social ways and practices, denounced by the prophet Amos and in that terrible indictment of "woes" pronounced by Jesus, as recorded in Matthew 23.

In the same way, one may speculate upon what might be the influence and power of such democratic countries as Canada, Great Britain and the United States in the crises that confront the world today, if every individual felt, lived and acted in full accordance with the professed spirit and the actual declarations of democracy, as these are expressed and acted upon by the finest and best citizens.

It would be a pretence to say that these democracies are strong and fully maintained in this sense. On the contrary, we know that they are weak, in spite of all the strength that they do possess. Because in many ways they fail to achieve the completeness of their own ideals in establishing for all, without distinction, the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

QUESTION STRENGTH

What might our strength be if we attained a democratic life, above and free from all racial and religious prejudice, in which the vestiges of caste and special privilege that still remain were swept away?

To ask this question is not to disparage the progress the democracies have made or to express any spirit of pessimism. Only the goals, and the God-given call to greatness, for us as for ancient Israel, are so much more than we have attained or achieved.

It is because so many in that ancient day were Israelites without guile, fired with a pure passion for Zion, that their influence was so great. And the hope of a needy world is still in its patriots of faith and vision.

Graduates With Prize

Green, of the Greater Victoria School Board, and Mrs. Green, was graduated from the University of British Columbia Thursday afternoon with his Bachelor of Commerce degree. He attended Sir James Douglas, Victoria High and Victoria College before going to U.B.C.

Boys' Town Founder, Fr. Flanagan, Dies

BERLIN (AP) — Rev. E. J. Flanagan, founder of Boys' Town in Nebraska, died early today, a spokesman for the army hospital here said.

The Nebraska priest, who would have been 62 years old July 13, was taken suddenly ill here Friday night.

Father Flanagan had been on an inspection tour of German youth facilities at the invitation of the U.S. army. He had made a similar tour in Japan last year.

Boys' Town, on the outskirts of Omaha, was founded by Father Flanagan in 1917. Since then he had obtained international recognition with spread of his credo: "There is no such thing as a bad boy."

Father Flanagan was born in Roscommon, Ireland. After studies in Ireland, the United States, Rome and Austria he was ordained priest at Innsbruck, Austria, in 1912. He returned at once to Nebraska, where he held pastorates. It was in Omaha that he conceived the idea of establishing a home for boys, after work with older men had convinced him it was necessary to nip men in the bud if they were to be kept from lives of crime.

87 Decorated At Jericho Ceremony

VANCOUVER (CP) — Echoes of the Second World War resounded briefly Friday when the Governor-General, Viscount Alexander, decorated 87 British Columbians at an investiture at the Jericho R.C.A.F. Station.

One of the most dramatic citations accompanied the award of the Distinguished Conduct Medal to Sgt. Darrow Routledge of Vancouver. After being taken prisoner by the Japanese after the fall of Hongkong he operated an espionage service for the British intelligence.

The citation read: "Although tortured and under constant threat of death by apprehension, he refused to reveal any information to the enemy."

Other decorations were awarded Christopher Spencer, for philanthropic and patriotic activity; Brig. Sherwood Lett; Rear-Admiral Victor Brodeur and Hon. Eric W. Hamber. Five women also were honored.

PAINT WHOLE HOUSE IN 5 MINUTES 40 SECONDS—With crowds cheering them on, members of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America slap paint on the Memphis, Tenn., home of Mrs. Juanita Webb. The painters finished the job in 5 minutes 40 seconds. The time is believed to be a new world's record.

YORK THEATRE

The flaming romance of a lovely fugitive fleeing from strife-torn Spain, "Wings of the Morning," Devonshire Films release currently at the York Theatre, stars a charming and exciting screen personality in Annabella, co-starred with Henry Fonda and Leslie Banks in the film, which presents the famous tenor, John McCormack.

In magnificent Technicolor, "Wings of the Morning" provides a thrilling mixture of drama, spectacle and surprise.

ROYAL THEATRE

Spencer Tracy, who plays Judge Timberlane in "Cass Timberlane," M-G-M filmization of the Sinclair Lewis best-seller, now at the Royal Theatre, was first lured to Hollywood after leaping to fame as Killer Mears in the Broadway production of "The Last Mile." In 1935 he joined M-G-M to star in "The Murder Man," and two years later he won the Academy Award for "Captains Courageous." The following year he again won the award as Father Flanagan in "Boys Town."

Where To Go Tonight

(As Advertised)

ATLAS — Humphrey Bogart in "Dark Passage."

CAPITOL—"The Big Clock," with Charles Laughton.

ODEON—Margaret Lockwood in "The White Unicorn."

RIO—"House of Dracula," with Lon Chaney.

ROYAL—Spencer Tracy in "Cass Timberlane."

ATLAS THEATRE

CAPITOL THEATRE

Ray Milland has never attempted to tabulate the exact number of letters he receives from screen fans, but the number runs in the neighborhood of 150,000 a year.

Currently co-starring with Charles Laughton in Paramount's suspense-packed thriller, "The Big Clock," at the Capitol Theatre, Milland recently disclosed that the fan mail influx has been at about the same rate for some eight years, with England and Turkey supplying the most from abroad.

RIO THEATRE

Screen veteran Ludwig Stossel plays an important featured role in Universal's "House of Dracula," which is at the Rio Theatre. The character thespian is seen as the efficient housekeeper to the psychopathic scientist, played by Onslow Stevens.

The film has Lon Chaney as the Wolf Man, John Carradine as Count Dracula and Glenn Strange as the Frankenstein Monster.

Show Royal Wedding Presents On Screen

The finest short subject to appear on any screen in months is now showing at the Odeon Theatre in Technicolor. This subject runs 20 minutes and gives you close-up views of all the gifts sent to Princess Elizabeth from Canada and the world — from kings, queens, dukes, presidents, tribes, manufacturers, clerks, housewives, children and people from every walk of life.

You also see a close-up of the Princess' wedding gown and gorgeous train. The camera takes you on a tour through the spacious exhibit hall and as the camera moves from gift to gift, the array of floral settings is a beautiful sight.

Margaret Lockwood In Emotional Role

A human story of a woman's search and sacrifice for a brief moment of happiness gives Margaret Lockwood a sympathetic and emotional role in John Corfield's "The White Unicorn," which is now showing at the Odeon Theatre.

This subject, adapted from Flora Sandstrom's delightful novel, "The Milk-White Unicorn," co-stars Margaret Lockwood with Ian Hunter, Dennis Price and Joan Greenwood, and the supporting cast includes Guy Middleton, Catherine Lacey, Mabel Constanduros and Paul Dupius, with Margaret Julia Lockwood playing her mother's screen daughter.

The DOCTOR Says:

EARLY DIAGNOSIS OFFERS CHANCE OF COMPLETE CURE FOR CANCER

By EDWIN P. JORDAN, M.D.

About one-fifth of all cancers in women originate in the breast—the most common location of cancer in women. When discovered early, good results can be anticipated. With early diagnosis and prompt treatment, 75 to 80 per cent can be cured.

Cancer of the breast is rare before the age of 25. It is more common between 45 and 55. After 55 it becomes less frequent again.

In the early stage there is not likely to be any pain, burning or other sensation. Some flattening of a portion of the breast is suspicious. Any irregularity which had not been present before also calls for attention.

When a lump in the breast is found which might be cancerous, a small piece of the tumor should be removed and examined under the microscope. If the microscope examination proves the presence of cancerous cells, then the tumor and the breast as well should be removed as soon as possible.

EARLY DIAGNOSIS

When done early there is a good chance of complete cure. If the early signs and symptoms are neglected until the cancer cells have spread to the glands in the armpit or elsewhere, cures can still be obtained, but not so many.

Cancer of the breast offers a particularly good opportunity to make an early diagnosis and to perform a thoroughly satisfactory surgical removal. Because the chances are so good, it is most unfortunate when women who have the slightest suspicion of breast trouble put off their visit to the doctor because they are afraid that they might be told that they have a cancer. Delay is generally very serious.

Question: How many people are born with their hearts on the right side of their bodies and how long do they live?

Answer: Actually there are about as many hearts on the right side of the chest as on the left. If there are no other abnormalities, it generally does not interfere with life expectancy.

Movie Stars Have Varied Hobbies For Their Spare Time

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — From reading the headlines, you might think the chief hobbies of the stars are night-club brawls, getting married and appearing in court. Actually, their off-the-set pastimes are much more normal.

Take Lew Ayres. He's an astronomy bug and spends many of his night hours peeking through a 12-inch telescope atop his Lookout Mountain home. Or Glenn Ford, a stamp collector.

Scratch an actor and you'll find a budding Rembrandt. Among the movie artists are Ginger Rogers, Frank Sinatra, Jane Wyman, Red Skelton, Linda Darnell, Cornel Wilde, and Merle Oberon.

Edward G. Robinson has one of the finest private art collections in the world. Harpo Marx, Charles Laughton and Paulette Goddard are other notable collectors.

OVERGROWN BOYS

Those overgrown boys, Barry Fitzgerald, Keenan Wynn and Larry Parks, like nothing better than to burn up the roads on their motorcycles. Clark Gable and Donald O'Connor enjoy tinkering with cars. Theirs, of course, are the high-powered, foreign-make variety.

OAK BAY THEATRE

Clean-shaven Robert Young grew a trim mustache "on order" in three and a half weeks' time for his role in the Hal Wallis production of Paramount's "The Searching Wind," currently at the Oak Bay Theatre.

Young shares stellar billing with Sylvia Sidney and Ann Richards in the picturization of Lillian Hellman's hit play.

Nasturtium is a name wrongly but persistently given to the two garden species Tropaeolum, majus and minus, the true nasturtium being the common watercress.

— DR. KILOWHATDARE —

I WAS STANDING OUTSIDE our new Warehouse today, when along comes a lady with this to say. "Pardon me sir . . . but, can you tell me, if an electrician . . . around he can be?" "Why yes," I said, "see there on that sign, that's a good firm & their work is fine. They'll help U out, wire your house, they did some good work . . . in this warehouse." "Oh . . . to wire MY house . . . I couldn't afford, I just want them to fix, my ironing cord. 'Cause last nite at home, my shin did bruise flash . . . sput . . . sput . . . and I blew a fuse. Then with some matches I stood on a char, out on the porch . . . replacing one there." "Humph," I said, as I gazed at her bag, "I'll bet that cord . . . is there inside." She fumbled the catch, 'n there sure enuff, it was stowed in there with the usual stuff. "Here . . . let me look, at its condition, I'm not only a poet . . . but a good electrician. Well now . . . no wonder she blew, these tiny bolts I'll have to unscrew. But not out here on the street, c'mon inside and we'll have a seat." So in we went & made the descent, into what they call . . . a bargain base-ment. But which we're using till we're straightened around, and we just call it . . . the underground. "Here," I sed, "as best I am able, we'll operate on this used oak table." "Goodness," she sed, "what lovely old oak, how much for THIS . . . do you soak???" "Oh . . . it's cheap . . . has a china & buffet, plus these 6 chairs . . . came in today. It's quarter cut oak, hasn't a scratch, at one ninety-five . . . you just couldn't match." "My gracious," watching me the while, you certainly DO . . . "Give It Away With A Smile." "Yes, and this screw is in here tight, I doubt if my knife can equal the fight." "Oh wait," she replied, "in my bag I'll look, from my sewing machine, a screw-driver I took. I fiddled around with that fool thing, before to town, I decided to bring. Oh . . . Heavens to Betsy . . . Heavens to Mable, I'll dump it all out . . . on your table. Ah . . . there it is, I was SURE it was there, I've never used it . . . my machine to repair." "LOOK," I sed, "these wires are mated, when they SHOULD be apart & insulated. Now watch that skin, I'll make a lunge, are you all ready with a sponge? That's it . . . isn't it fun, I think we should use some oxo-jun. Now scapel . . . sponge . . . look deep in there." "Oh . . . your so steady . . . Dr. Kil-dare." "Thank you," I sed, "I'll go wash my hands, in one of our old-fashioned marble washstands. Soon I returned we went up outside, as she thanked me again . . . for what I've described. Then we stood for a moment, & chewed the rag, you CAN'T lose at HUMBER'S . . . IT'S IN THE BAG."

HUMBER BROS. (Maurice, "Barley" & Bruce)

still in The Heaney Warehouse . . . soon next door . . . just 360' away.

ARE YOU LISTENING Miss P . . . of Belmont Ave. "I hope our patient is doing well, and you finished your ironing O.K. You know of course, I was only kidding about that loaf of your home-made bread."

9 To Stand Trial For Complicity In Murder Of Gandhi

NEW DELHI (AP)—The Indian government announced today the names of nine men who must stand trial for their lives on charges that they conspired to engineer the assassination of Mohandas K. Gandhi.

The official gazette of India named N. V. Godse as the trigger man and said he and his eight co-defendants would be tried before Judge Atma Charan, now a session judge at Cawnpore. Judge Charan will head a special court at Delhi's historic Red Fort.

Sources said the trial probably will start "towards the end of next week." Gandhi was slain in New Delhi Jan. 30, and the investigation since has been veiled by official secrecy.

The Gazette linked Godse with Madan Lal, who was accused of planting a bomb at Gandhi's prayer grounds, later the scene of his death. The bomb exploded without casualties 10 days before Gandhi fell to an assassin's pistol.

ALL MAHRATTAS

It identified the defendants as members of the Mahratta race, known foes of Gandhi's policy of love and non-violence toward Moslems. The Moslems are traditional enemies of the Mahrattas.

The defendants named in addition to Godse and Madan Lal, are: V. D. Savarkar, former president of the anti-Mohammedan All-India Hindu Mahasabha, an old-time revolutionary independence worker; Gopal Vinayak Godse, brother of the accused assassin; Narayan Battatraya Apte; Vishn U Ramkrishna Karkare; Digambar Ramchandra Badge; Kistayya Shankar and Dattatraya Sadashiv Parchure.

Victoria Air Cadets On Morning Flight

Nearly 50 air cadets of Greater Victoria Air Cadet Squadron No. 89 took to the air in an R.C.A.F. Dakota this morning for a flight over the city.

The flight was part of plan to familiarize the cadets with aircraft and flying prior to their training camp this summer.

Leaders Up In Heaviest Buying

NEW YORK (AP)—The heaviest buying in years swamped the stock market today and put leaders up fractions to two or more points at new highs since 1946.

The high-speed ticker tape was as much as 13 minutes behind actual floor transactions during a long part of the short session, a record since the boom days of 1929.

Volume was so huge that the stock exchange was compelled to print "flash" quotations from the start.

U.S. Submarine On Good Will Visit

U.S.S. Carmin, a 1,500-ton submarine, commanded by Cmdr. R. F. Byrnes, U.S.N., is arriving at Esquimalt naval base this afternoon for a good will visit, R.C.N. officials report.

Carmin is the first of two U.S. Navy vessels to visit Victoria this month. The destroyer, U.S.S. Carmick, is scheduled to participate in Victoria Day celebrations and will arrive here May 23.

Concrete Freighters To Be Breakwaters

VANCOUVER (CP)—Built by the United States Maritime Commission when the steel shortage was acute, four concrete freighters of the Second World War have been assigned to become breakwaters for the Powell River Company.

The "ugly ducklings"—built at a cost of more than $4,000,000—will be used by the pulp and paper company to protect their log storage pond.

19 Army Volunteers To Serve On Carrier

OTTAWA (CP) — Some 19 Canadian army volunteers are to be selected for duty on board the aircraft carrier Magnificent, when the naval vessel moves into northern waters this summer, army headquarters announced Friday night.

The army personnel, mostly clerks, will be taken from No. 1 Canadian air liaison group at Dartmouth, N.S. Because of the long tour of duty expected, preference is being given to unmarried men.

Grain

WINNIPEG (CP)—Oats and barley scored advances in early dealings on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange today on the strength of eastern shipper demand. However, offerings increased in the last half of the session and early gains were reduced.

In the rye futures, May scored a maximum 10-cent gain to reach another all-time high of $4.63. The other two months advanced moderately on commission house buying promptly by reports of export business.

CHICAGO (AP) — Grains started off steady today but backed down before the close. Losses were substituted for early fractional gains. The decline followed a let-up in short covering in May contracts. In part, the selling represented week-end profit-taking.

One Woman's Day

By NANCY HODGES

OUR 'FIXATION'

MARK TWAIN, THAT expert on weather, once wrote that weather is a literary specialty and no untrained hand can turn out a good article on it.

That came to my mind when I read of what the Dominion's leading Weather Man had to say concerning our local variety—or rather about the impressions that get abroad about our weather.

The gentleman in question came all the way from Toronto to look into the complaints we Victorians have been making about the city's forecasts. And the sum and substance of his two weeks' observations is that we are quite unjustified in complaining. So it looks as if we were back again where we started!

NOT UTILIZING THEM

AMONG OTHER THINGS the meteorological expert told us was that we were not utilizing the available weather services to the fullest extent.

I don't quite know what he means by that, but we are certainly using all the varieties of weather sent us to a fuller extent than I, for one, would wish. In fact, the constant changes irresistibly reminds me of the lines:

"The sun was warm but the wind was chill.
You know how it is with an April day:
When the sun is out and the wind is still,
You're one month on in the middle of May.
But if you so much as dare to speak,
A cloud comes over the sunlit arch,
A wind comes off a frozen peak—

POOR SALESMANSHIP

FURTHER, THE SAME visiting expert tells us we are not selling our weather as we might. "First of all you have to sell the citizens, and they will sell to the tourists," he is reported as saying.

Well, I can't quite see that his suggested distribution of daily bulletins to the hotels, Chamber of Commerce and stores is going to help much. We who are already here can take the weather as it comes.

But if the prognostications and pronouncements about Victoria that we hear over the radio from the Vancouver Weather Bureau continue to go out, the listening outsider won't come here, anyway, so what's the use?

POOR SAMPLE

AS I INTIMATED EARLIER, nobody is readier than I to admit that our local variety of weather has fallen far below the samples we usually have for sale.

Why, even the bees have been so discouraged by the smidgens of sun that have come our way that they have gone on strike for a one-day week on their pollination jobs. And the flowers in the gardens are getting mixed up and frustrated on meeting blossoms that should have bloomed in the spring, tra-la, but didn't.

But, making all allowances for those meteorological mix-ups, we Victorians don't like Vancouver telling the world that our weather is even worse than it really is.

THOSE RIVALRIES

AS TO THE VISITING Torontonian's little jibe about our "fixation" with regard to Vancouver, that may be. But we certainly have good cause for one.

Not satisfied with stealing many of our federal departmental offices from under our very noses, they now want to steal—by meteorological innuendo—our biggest tourist asset, our reputation for congenial weather.

And when it comes to fixations, I suggest that if the Toronto expert takes a look nearer home he will find a super-duper sample—in Toronto's attitude toward Ottawa!

Severe Penalties On Liquor Charges

Norman Higgins, 1403 Store Street, appeared before Magistrate H. C. Hall in city police court today and pleaded guilty to two liquor charges, sale of liquor and supplying an Indian with an intoxicant.

On the sale of liquor the magistrate imposed a fine of $300 or, in default of payment, three months in jail. On the supplying an Indian count he was given a straight three-month sentence.

The magistrate ordered that the three-month term on the supply charge would start either from the day he paid the $300 fine or from the day the jail alternative finished on the other counter. In other words he will definitely serve three months and if he defaults payment it will be six months.

Sgt. Peris Atkinson reported a police squad caught accused giving an Indian a bottle of wine and at his Store Street premises picked up many cases bearing 141 bottles of cheap wine, two bottles of rye, two full cartoons of beer and a quantity of empties.

Convalescent Home Blessed By Bishop

In the presence of some 200 guests the property known for many years as the home of the late Sir Frank Barnard, "Cloverly," received its new name, St. Gregory's-by-the-Sea and was blessed into new service and activity by Bishop Hill.

St. Gregory's-by-the Sea, now owned by the Sisters of the Love of Jesus, henceforth will be a convalescent home and a place of relaxation for anyone needing rest. Bishop Hill also blessed and consecrated a new Shrine to Our Lady of Fatima, which stands amid a bower of flowering trees and bright flowers a short distance from the house. The ceremony, in which Monsignor Wood and Father MacLennan assisted, was impressive.

Frank A. Martin was fined $50 and his license was suspended for three months when he pleaded guilty in city police court today to a charge of dangerous driving. Charge arose out of an accident he was in with a lamp standard at the northeast corner of Yates and Douglas, according to police testimony. His car went over the sidewalk to strike the standard.

The Bookstand

By AILEEN CAMPBELL

BOOKS on how to do things from cooking to making speeches and a hundred activities in between, have a steady appeal at the Victoria Public Library with books on gardening and fishing tops in demand these days.

Spring, regardless of the weather, always brings a flood of requests and reserves on all types of gardening manuals with two popular ones at the moment being Begonia Culture and the Women's Home Companion Garden Book.

An interesting newcomer in the fishing department is James Dickie's From Tyrone to the Test, a book of fishing reminiscences, which includes chapters on fly-tying and fish psychology. Mr. Dickie apparently believes the thinking processes of the fish should be known by all anglers.

* * *

JUDGING from the questions and interest in such books as C. W. Wright's Better Speeches For All Occasions, there are many men, women and children in Victoria who are out to learn how to express themselves with clarity and ease, whether the occasion is a wedding, address to a club or a high school debate.

Mr. Wright's book covers the obvious toasts, valedictories, memorials and such miscellaneous items as parent-teacher talks, eulogies and sales talks. Hurried and baffled about-to-be grooms are regular borrowers, usually the day before the wedding for a book on responses to the toast to the bride, according to librarians.

INCLUDED in a list of Canada's 100 great books, compiled by a committee of eight judges, at the request of the Arts and Letters Section of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, are such favorites as Mazo de la Roche's Whiteoak Chronicles, including Jalna and Hugh MacLennan's Barometer Rising. The story of the latter was laid in Halifax during the First World War and established MacLennan as one of the leading Canadian novelists.

The list of 100 works includes fiction, poetry, history and essays chosen from 400 titles nominated by the judges for consideration. Gwethalyn Graham's Earth and High Heaven, Audrey Alexandra Brown's A Dryad in Nanaimo, Emily Carr's Klee Wyck and two works of Stephen Leacock are among the 100.

'A Russian Journal'

NOT politics but the private life of the Russian people—what they wear and eat or do at parties, how they work and dance and play is the subject matter of A Russian Journal.

At the outset, the noted author John Steinbeck and photographer Robert Capa planned to avoid politics and the larger issues—get to the Russian people if they could. They apparently did and the result is a fine objective report of what they saw. They do not interpret what they saw, they merely, like all good reporters are supposed to, set down the facts, whether favorable or unfavorable of their journey in Russia.

Steinbeck found that "Russians are like all other peoples, some are bad, but by far the great number are good." They have much misinformation about the United States and farmers were surprised to learn that the U.S. aided its farmers just as the government of Russia.

They asked if the United States would attack them . . . "will we have to defend our country again in one lifetime?" They said they got the idea the U.S. might attack Russia from American newspapers. They could not understand that if the American people did not want war, why did not the government control those newspapers and men who talk war.

Rent and food, Steinbeck found cheap although luxuries came high. Black markets in certain commodities and services flourished in Russian cities just as in those of capitalistic countries, he said. There was little laughter in the streets of Moscow and rarely smiles. He had to get out in the country to find that.

The statues, pictures and busts of Stalin, everywhere he moved, he found a frightening and distasteful thing to Americans.

Steinbeck has done a masterful job of reporting of a journey through a land that is on everyone's tongue today. Those violently on one side of the fence or the other, will probably have fault to find with it, Steinbeck says. Those people, however, who feel they know nothing about the Russian people, how they look, what they do and what they are thinking and talking about, will read A Russian Journal with interest.

Whether the facts as set down by Steinbeck give the individual a favorable or unfavorable picture of the Russian people they will at least be an aid to understanding for which leaders of all countries today are appealing.

Steinbeck has done a service no other writer or commentator has done in recent years. He has not interpreted the news for his readers. At the beginning of his Journal he gave this reason for its beginning:

"We were depressed, not so much by the news but by the handling of it. For news is no longer news, at least that part of it which draws the most attention. News has become a matter of punditry. A man sitting at a desk in Washington or New York reads the cables and rearranges them to fit his own mental pattern and his by-line. What we often read as news now, is not news at all, but the opinion of one of half a dozen pundits as to what news means."

'And All Your Beauty'

"And All Your Beauty," by William R. Watson (Macmillan).

MANY are the books written about Canada, but few English speaking Canadian authors have portrayed the Dominion and its people so vividly as William R. Watson in his story "And All Your Beauty."

Author Watson, who incidentally has not the use of his arms but writes with his toes, wrote the book after making a daring trip across Canada in a trailer. He was accompanied by his young wife and his dog.

The book is a conversational portrait of Canada which deserves praise chiefly for bringing out the idiosycrasies of the people. He records discussion on politics, religion, race, economy, farming and mining. The book is also crammed with information, and the historical background of the various communities.

Unlike many authors who omit mentioning some of the most controversial problems of the day, the Watsons faithfully record what the people are thinking and saying. One of the problems completely discussed in the book is the racial issue between Quebec and Ontario. The discussions recorded on this subject show that it is one of the main problems which is worrying Canadians of today.

There exists an idea among many Canadians that there is little difference between themselves and Americans. Perhaps after reading the book, readers will agree that Canada stands out as something distinctly different from the United States.

Victoria is mentioned in the book. The couple were disappointed to find it is against the law to park trailers for the night within the city limits.—HUMPHRY DAVY.

'My Love Wears Black'

"My Love Wears Black," by Octavus Roy Cohen (Macmillan).

THIS may not keep you on the edge of your easy chair but will be entertaining enough to keep you with it through blackmail, romance and three murders.

As usual the man the reader suspects the least turns out to be the murderer. Author Cohen drops two conversational tid bits that would reveal his identity but only inveterate whodunit readers would pick them out.

The plot set in Hollywood concerns a new movie star, Jean Rutledge, and her fiance, Bruce Ingram, who find themselves in the thick of three murders. Fred Wilson, Jean's estranged husband is found dead in her lonely mountain home to start the action. The dialogue is not too brilliant but comes quick and fast.

Music And Drama

By AUDREY ST.D. JOHNSON

NUMEROUS musical compositions have inspired romanticists to weave stories about them; some wholly fantastic; some having a thread or so of truth in the fabric. The "Moonlight" Sonata and the C sharp minor Prelude are striking examples of the anxiety of many people to attach a concrete meaning to an abstract idea.

AUDREY ST. D. JOHNSON

On the other hand, many compositions do have very human and revealing stories. Good music is made up of little pieces of the material of the composer's life, and is full of his particular color and personality, his character traits and spiritual point of view. Otherwise it would have no importance as a living creation. A composer's admiration for another person, his ability to appreciate nature, his cynicism, wit, sensualism, his reactions to events, can all be expressed through his music. A whole period of the man's life, his inner conflicts and outward moods are reflected in the larger works of Schumann, Beethoven and Tchaikowsky, for instance. Think of Tchaikowsky's B minor symphony—the "Pathetique." It was written as his life was drawing to its close, in the shadow cast by the termination of his 13-year "paper" friendship with Nadejda Von Meck.

But some of the purest music in the world does not in any way acknowledge the circumstances of its creator. Both Mozart and Schubert wrote joyous lilting music while enduring the utmost physical misery. This does not negate, however, what has already been said, for such music is telling us clearly that these men had deep springs and wells of happiness within themselves, completely isolated from contamination by the outside world; that they had a spiritual vision that dimmed the contemplation of their sordid, poverty-stricken surroundings. The story of the man is always there, within his music, for all who care to read.

ANTON Bruckner was a devoted admirer of Wagner, and in the Adagio of Bruckner's seventh symphony, the depth of this devotion is told. After visiting the old composer one day, Bruckner came home with a heavy sense of sorrow, as though a great light shining in the world was about to be put out for all time. He felt that it was impossible for the Bayreth master to live much longer and with the thought brooding darkly over his mind, he wrote the Adagio in C sharp minor that was later used in memorial services for Richard Wagner.

A very great number of Schumann's compositions were influenced by his feeling for his wife, Clara. His long and difficult courtship appears quite frequently in a musical comment or a sad impatient mood. The plaintive "Why?" (that was played a few weeks ago by William Kapell) was written when papa Wieck first refused to accept Schumann as a son-in-law and sent Clara away to Dresden.

VICTORIA'S right to claim a place in the sun as a city of culture is many years overdue and will remain so as long as the spirit of inertia and selfishness continues to hang like a cloud over local endeavor.

It is most depressing to realize that less than 20 per cent of our 100,000 population actually support such basic cultural activities as our Symphony Society, Little Theatre, Musical Club, G. and S. Society and Arts Centre organization. By "support" I do not mean attendance at an occasional concert, but, in the first place, membership contribution, which is the only means of financing satisfactorily for such organizations; in the second place, the devotion of a little time and labor to their various projects.

Victoria, of all Canadian cities, seems to have a citizenry that takes next to no interest in creating opportunities for young people, either of a recreational or an artistic nature. The arena is a glaring example of this; so is the crying absence of a civic arts building. Other places in Canada have found those who were in a position to give, more than ready to make funds available for such enterprises. If a similar spirit existed in Victoria, we would have the arena, an art gallery and a proper auditorium; the symphony and theatre societies would have large enough sustaining memberships to allow them to expand and develop as it is aesthetically in their power to do; and we would have musical and dramatic festivals every year that would bring the standard of these arts to as high a level as exists anywhere on the continent.

WHAT is the reason for this unique lack of civic pride, this deadly indifference? Is it a state for which one might possibly find a cure if one knew the answer, but I have not so far found anyone who does. Perhaps, as we live in one of the most beautiful places in Canada, it is a question of smugness; nature having done her work so well, it is unnecessary for man to do more than sit back and contemplate his Eden. Unfortunately, such an attitude is becoming only to age. When we are old, that is probably the ideal existence; but to youth, it is utterly foreign. And that explains the oft-repeated truism: "There is nothing in Victoria for the young people; it is a city for those who are done with the business of life." And so talented, ambitious, energetic youth shakes the bloom of Victoria out of its hair and goes off to shed its light in some more fruitful corner of the world.

So it may be that we are lotus-eaters! Or perhaps the sea level robs us of the normal amount of energy; or it may be that, as we can't deduct anything from our income tax returns for contributions to culture, we see nothing to be gained from such contributions. Incidentally, it might help Canada's intellectual growth enormously if deductions of this kind were allowed—providing that the contributions were really handsome! And then again, it might be a sort of decadence. So many of our citizens have traveled and lived in other parts; have seen and heard the best of everything; perhaps it may be a case of feeling that any local or original effort is too trivial to inspire enthusiasm.

However, all this is merely conjecture. Perhaps the real cause is a combination of all these factors and many more. But the effect is obvious on all sides. It is high time and past for residents of Victoria to acknowledge the debt they owe to fortune, and to start paying the bill by fully supporting projects that are functioning to enrich the mind and spirit of the community which is their community and in which, up to now, they have taken far too little pride.

* * *

SPEAKING of musical festivals reminds me of another grievance which I, in common with a good many people, have nursed for some time. Why should our very excellent musical festival have been allowed to die? Why should we sit so calmly by and watch musical festivals thrive, not only in other parts of Canada, but all over B.C, and do nothing about reviving the movement in the capital?

Vancouver opened its well-supported eight-day festival this week. May 18th will see the opening of a four-day competition festival at Kelowna—the twenty-second annual festival of the Okanagan Valley Musical Festival Association, with a total of 133 classes that include vocal, choral, instrumental, speech arts, dancing, drama and original composition.

Many years ago, before there had been a similar movement in Victoria, there was no standard of performance among local musicians and no standard of appreciation among local audiences. During the seasons in which we held our music festivals and were visited by highly-trained adjudicators, standards rose enormously. I am assured by those who watched the process, that what we have and are today, we owe to the festival influence. But it is not nearly enough. Here and there, there are signs of backsliding; certainly we are not going forward.

* * *

EXPERTS have claimed many things for the festival movement. It broadens and deepens the performer's understanding of his art; it teaches sportsmanship; it stimulates interest, not only from an actual participation, but from an audience participation point-of-view. All over Canada, in big and small communities, the musical festival movement is growing and is regarded as a healthy sign of cultural development.

But in Victoria, where it did so much good in the past, it has been thrust aside and has remained neglected and forgotten. Until something can be done to reinstate the musical festival we must be considered, musically speaking, a not very progressive community.

THEY LEARN YOUNG

They learn early in Hollywood. Eve Arden's three-year-old Liza stood entranced in front of her portrait which had just been completed by artist Zoe Shippen. "Well, do you like it?" asked Eve.

"Yes," replied Liza, "but I don't think it's very glamorous of me, do you?"

* * *

Groucho Marx must be getting old. He turned down a stage play, "Dr. Willy Nilly," which Howard da Sylva owns, as "too bawdy."

. . . Gene Raymond realizes a long-time ambition. He'll direct a new picture, "The Constellation Story." And one of the actors he'll direct is himself.

A feminine tourist, obviously from a small town, stopped veteran film writer Arthur Caesar on Hollywood Boulevard and asked: "Pardon me, where are all the monuments supposed to be on Hollywood Boulevard?"

"Madame," said Caesar, "I am one of the monuments."

'Cabbages And Kings'

By PETER ELIOT

"I HAVE never forgotten an anecdote of Henry Ward Beecher" (reminisces A. E. Bostwick in his A Life With Men and Books—published by N. W. Wilson Co.) "which he told me one day at lunch. Beecher, on a lecture tour, was introduced at one place by a local magnate, who paid him a quantity of rather fulsome compliments. When he had finished Beecher arose and began, 'Ladies and Gentlemen: Do you know how I feel? I feel just like a buckwheat cake that has had a whole pitcher of maple syrup poured over it.'

* * *

"ON A TRIP to read a paper at Emporia, Kansas" (Bostwick continues), "I sat at the lunch table next to Mrs. William White and found her a charming companion. Mr. White was in Europe at the time. She told me a good deal about Walt Mason, whose house had been pointed out to me on a drive that morning. Walt was at the time known all over the country, for his verses, printed solid, like prose, which had made him well off, if not affluent, as his dwelling testified. Not many years previous Walt had blown in to Emporia, down and out, a tramp printer in need of a job. He explained this status to Mr. White, who looked at him rather doubtfully and asked, 'Well, what can you do?' In reply Walt fished out of his pocket one of his inimitable prose poems and handed it to Mr. White. He read it and said at once, 'All right, go to work; we can keep you on, as long as you can turn out stuff as good as this.' Walt had been on the paper a good many years when I was there, and the flow of prosaic poetics had continued unabated!

* * *

"AT THE Hudson Park Branch only a few days after its opening" (writes Bostwick), "an indignant borrower presented himself at the desk, and the following colloquy ensued:

"'I thought this library was free!'

"'Well, it is free.'

"'Then why do we have to pay admission?'

"'You don't.'

"'We don't hey? Just look here!'

"And he dragged the assistant to the front door, where sure enough an urchin of the neighborhood had been collecting one cent from each user for nobody knows how long. His astuteness was evidenced by the smallness of the fee, which everyone had been paying without asking questions. Had he demanded a dime, a protest would have come much sooner. That boy must be a bank president by this time!"

* * *

MOLIERE was 51 when he wrote Le Malade Imaginaire, and it was his last play. He produced it at the theatre in the Palais Royal, and he himself took the part of Argan, the hyponchondriac. Suddenly, in the midst of the fourth performance the imaginary invalid turned into a real one. A faintness seized him, he began spitting blood in real earnest, and a few hours later one of the kindliest spirits of laughter that have ever visited this earth had left it forever.

* * *

EDGAR WALLACE found it very difficult to find suitable backers in his early short story enterprises. He succeeded, however, in getting a small press to print his works—at a loss, due to his over-advertisings. When the fortunes of the press were at their lowest ebb he had a communication from a Durham schoolmaster, who was anxious to publish his own collection of short stories. Wallace met him and made arrangements for their publication, and eventually they came out, but only after a struggle. On the day the books were to be delivered he had a printer's bill to pay and was obliged to pawn everything he had to raise £50 to the books in hand. And so a young author named "Ian Hay" was introduced to the world!

SPEAKING of journalists, James (better known as) "Jimmie" Dunn, gives a vivid account in "Paperchase" of the newsman's calling.

"Memories that make newspapermen grin? I knew a 'runner' in Wolverhampton. In newspaper jargon a 'runner' is a man who brings in odd items of news, accidents, fires, anything: And according to the value of his information he is given a few shillings.

"This runner brought in news of a man who had had an accident in an alley. This was somewhat unusual and the runner was given a little extra. The next night another man had an accident in another alley. The runner was given a little extra. But when, on the next night, a third man had an accident in an alley, the police began to take notice. They had a shrewd suspicion that the runner was manufacturing his own news. The next time he was picked up by them, and he was always being picked up by them, he undoubtedly got a little extra. But he sold the news of his arrest for a half a crown. A philosopher."

WOMEN'S RIGHTS

"Lloyd George," Dunn recounts, "was to address a meeting of miners, who bitterly resented any organized opposition to their political god. A score of young women, wearing spikes round their waists beneath their clothing, defied the angry miners, and when Lloyd George rose to speak, he was received with that familiar battle-cry: 'Votes for Women!'

"The infuriated miners grabbed the women. Cut by the hidden spikes, they forgot their native chivalry and roughly handled the shrieking women.

Mice Fight Cancer

A Pampered 35-Cent Rodent May Be Man's Best Friend In New Research For Chemical To Halt Dread Killer

Pictures and Text
By ARTHUR RICKERBY

Munching sunflower seeds and a specially prepared vitamin-filled diet, they enjoy hospitality at its best as white-clad technicians move softly about catering to their comforts.

Any one of these 16,000 mice, worth 36 cents apiece, may hold the answer to a cure for dreaded cancer.

They are the key to vital experiments in the search for a chemical cure for cancer at the new 14-story Sloan-Kettering Institute for Cancer Research. In the spotless laboratories of the modernistic $4,500,000 building, more than 500 mice each week undergo chemotherapy — an attempt to destroy cancer cells through injection of chemical compounds.

In chemotherapy, scientists hope to find the weapon to combat some of the forms of cancer which cannot be controlled permanently by traditional methods of surgery and radiation, such as leukemia, which is cancer of the blood-forming tissue.

* * *

RESEARCH has shown that there are certain chemical compounds which, in the test tube, kill cancer cells while allowing normal cells to live.

These have proved ineffective outside the test tube, but the knowledge of their existence has spurred scientists to look for other chemicals which will control cancer in the human body.

Experiments with chemical compounds of unknown effect begin with the mice and, if successful, are tried on larger animal and finally on man.

Cancerous mice are injected with chemicals designed to destroy diseased cells. Later their tissues are transplanted to healthy mice.

If the healthy animals fail to contract the disease, the compound undergoes further exhaustive tests in the hope that it may be the one which will destroy cancer cells as completely as penicillin destroys bacteria.

In between these two steps, live tissue from both normal and cancerous mice is grown in glass tubes in a fluid that simulates the natural blood environment of the tissue. Then one of the 15,000 chemical compounds awaiting trial at the Institute is added to the tissue.

* * *

AFTER 24 hours, the cancer tissue is removed from the tube and planted in susceptible mice, which are constantly checked for subsequent development or non-development of the disease.

Scurrying about in their metal cages stacked ceiling-high on the institute's 12th floor, these mice live out their short life-span in a highly controlled environment. Their weight is checked daily; their quarters are air-conditioned; their diet is sunflower seeds, grain seeds, and a special laboratory pellet made of grain and fats and loaded with vitamins.

The mice themselves are of pedigreed stock, "a special variety," explains Dr. Charles B. Stock, chief of chemotherapy research at the institute, "inbred for many generations and particularly susceptible to leukemia."

Imported at the rate of 2,500 a week from specialized breeding farms in New York state, their life span at the laboratory is about two or three weeks. Their inbreeding makes them as sensitive to changes of environment as it does to cancer itself.

A trio of pampered mice at Sloan-Kettering Institute is weighed on laboratory scales to check their health. As "guinea-pigs" in cancer research with chemicals, they are probably the best cared-for mice anywhere in the world.

Drunkard-Genius

By DOUGLAS LARSEN

SIMPLE chemical tests may some day be able to predict whether a child will grow up to become a drunkard, drug addict, dullard or a brilliant student.

And medicines may be discovered to help a child avoid the unpleasant fates which the chemistry of his body has in store for him.

That is the hope of Prof. Roger Williams of the University of Texas. At the annual meeting of the National Academy of Sciences in Washington, D.C., he revealed the results of experiments which he believes prove those goals possible.

His tests were made on a group of his students. He proved that the body of each one was, in effect, a very different chemical factory. He did this by analyzing saliva and body wastes, and by other tests. Their bodies each produced different and distinctive combinations of chemicals. And the food they ate, Williams discovered, didn't affect these combinations.

Williams calls these chemical differences the "metabolic personality" of an individual, and it is his thesis that the chemistry of a person is a determining factor in his personality.

* * *

PREVIOUS work in this field, Williams points out, has already shown that a substance called homogentisic acid is always found in the body wastes of albinos. And when a chemical called phenyl ketonuria is produced by a person, it is accompanied by feeblemindedness.

Each person's production of different chemicals is the reason why bloodhounds can recognize the scent of an individual and track him down, Williams says.

Williams believes that the best practical field for his work today is in the study of alcoholism. As the result of his research, he thinks it is primarily a person's chemistry which causes him to become a problem drinker. This is also why persons react so differently to alcohol. He thinks that it explains why alcoholism is practically unknown among Jews, while some nationalities show alcoholism as high as 70 per cent.

The chemistry of a person also predetermines whether he is likely to become a drug addict.

"Certainly drug idiosyncracies, which are far more common than often supposed, have their basis in metabolic differences," Williams says.

If this line of research is pushed to the ultimate conclusion, Williams hopes it will lead to a discovery of ways to control a person's metabolic personality in such a way as to prevent alcoholism or drug addiction. And when the chemical which all alcoholics produce is isolated, then tests can be made on children to determine whether they will have a tendency toward alcoholism.

* * *

HE EXPLAINS another fruitful field for his study:

"One of the areas in which the study of 'metabolic personalities' offers the greatest promise is in the field of mental disease. Here we have the prospect of developing a more exact science in collaboration with trained psychologists, to discover the basic differences which underly mental disease and insanity."

His research also proves that there is no such thing as an "average person," Williams says.

He applies this theory to the use of tobacco:

"The careful statistical studies of Raymond Pearl on the effect of tobacco on longevity showed quite clearly, in my opinion, that there are individuals who can use tobacco heavily throughout their adult life without having their life span shortened materially. Just as clearly, however, this study showed that heavy smoking for some individuals can cut short their life span by 10, 20 or more years. These differences in reaction to nicotine are, without much question, based upon differences in metabolic personalities of the different tobacco users."

Williams further contends that "not only does it appear that individual metabolic personalities will be found to be important in dealing with such diseases as infantile paralysis, circulatory diseases, allergies, diabetes, dental caries and mental diseases in general, but it seems likely that these metabolic patterns are factors in numerous general problems such as nutrition, education, marriage and divorce and even in a broader way in peace and war."

Girl Guerrillas

AMONG the hard-bitten Communist guerrillas camped out in the mountains of Greece are some 3000 girl fighters, many of them as warlike as any Amazon of the Greek legends.

These girl guerrillas—most of them between the ages of 17 and 30—share the hardships of the long marches and the rough life in the open. Armed with rifles and machine guns, they shoot and loot with the fiercest of their male comrades. Every week a few of them are killed, wounded and captured.

One brown-haired Macedonian girl told the soldiers who captured her that she had slipped away from her home to find excitement in the mountains. "Besides," she added, "all the best-looking boys in our village had joined the guerrillas."

Other girl guerrillas have volunteered for similar reasons, but probably most of the girls in the mountain bands joined up with the muzzles of guerrilla rifles pressed persuasively in their backs. Only a few of the girls fight because they are determined Communists.

THE GREEK government estimated that the guerrillas recruited forcibly 2,358 women and girls during the last six months of 1947. In the first months of this year, they carried away more at a rate of about 400 a month.

The new girl recruits are given basic military training just like the men. Then, they are assigned to units made up of 10 men and two women and marched off to the camp where they will live between raids.

Not all of the girls are assigned combat duty. Some cook and clean up in the camps. Others are used, when there are no mules around, to carry loads of guerrilla ammunition and plunder.

The guerrillas depend on raids against government-held villages for most of their food and clothing, but sometimes the pickings are so poor they have to eat their own mules, an unhappy situation which just makes more work for the girls.

IN THEIR camps, the girl guerrillas live in crude huts. On marches, they sleep in the open. The girl guerrilla's boudoir is a nice flat stone at the edge of a mountain stream. Her wardrobe is a collection of cast-off uniforms and looted clothing torn by brambles and soiled from weeks of wear.

The love life of these lady warriors is wrapped in mystery. Captured girl guerrillas claim there is no immorality in the mountain bands. They say the guerrilla chiefs discourage marriages in the fighting forces, but will sometimes permit a civil ceremony—never the church wedding most Greek girls want.

An engaged couple usually is separated, presumably to prevent soft thoughts of romance from interfering with the harsh business at hand. They are told they can be married and live happily ever after when the Communist victory has been won.

A girl guerilla, but not by choice, this 19-year-old Greek surrendered to government forces and said she was captured by the rebels and forced to join guerrillas as a nurse

Paris At Night

Story by ROSETTE HARGROVE
Pictures by MAX WINTER

THE Canadian and American tourists are coming back to France, and the guides and travel agencies are dusting off the conducted tours and excursions with a happy light in their eyes.

For the visitors from British Columbia or Indiana and the service men who get leave from their occupation duties in Germany, a new sight-seeing attraction has been added: the Normandy landing beaches. But the pre-war favorites are in operation again, too, with "Paris by Night" still number-one with the tourists.

We went along on one of the night-time bus excursions, which is offered by every travel agency in Paris. No two are alike, but this one, run by an American agency, provides a modicum of thrills without shocking the not-so-young couples and timorous maiden aunts who want to see Paris night life.

* * *

THEY get to see a chamber of horrors, an authentic dance hall with an Apache dance, and the famed nudity of the Bal Tabarin floor show, along with a sprinkling of champagne at each stop. And for a perfect chaperone, they have 53-year-old Octave Wolf, a Tunisian-born Frenchman who ranks as a "National Guide," speaks about eight languages, and is inordinately proud of the fact that in World War I he acted as interpreter at Chateau Thierry with the famous 42nd Rainbow Division.

I sat beside a staid middleaged American woman when I climbed aboard Wolf's bus for the excursion.

"Is this your first 'Paris by Night' tour?" my seat mate wanted to know.

When I admitted it was (resident Parisians are the same way about guided tours as resident New Yorkers are about Chinatown), she beamed, but stopped asking questions when I admitted Paris is my home town. All she would tell me after that was that she came from the Middle West and had saved "Paris by Night" for the climax of a visit to London, Holland, Belgium and France.

In front of me sat Sgt. John J. Dorgan and his wife, Mary, of Palisades Park, N.J. "Paris by Night" was their final fling before John went back to his duties at Nuernberg and Mary sailed for the U.S. to visit her parents.

* * *

THE other members of this night's excursion included a sombre, grey-haired couple from Canada, a score of women in twos and threes and a couple of solitary ones, a trio of rather giggly Wacs on leave from Germany, a young Swiss couple, and 13-year-old Frank Bennett Jones, 2nd, son of a U.S. Army officer in Germany, who was escorting his mother for the tour.

We stopped first at the Cavern of the Terror, which is at the end of the "Street of the Fishing Cat" in the Latin Quarter. In a cabaret (empty at the early hour of 9 p.m.) the tourists drank a glass of champagne and were entertained by an illusionist before climbing down a winding stairway to torture chambers of Revolutianary days.

Next was Montmartre and "La Boule Noire," a Parisian dance hall.

There's nothing faked here. Patrons are working-men with their girls, servicemen on leave, as well as con men, pickpockets, gangsters and similar characters. Sometimes there's a little trouble but the manager, who is an ex-boxer, can quell any uprisings. Octave kept a careful check on everybody, just the same.

At the Bal Tabarin, the final stop, we had time to see the entire show. Everybody was shepherded up to the balcony directly facing the stage, an excellent vantage point, and a bottle of champagne was allotted to every four people.

Everybody seemed satisfied. The three Wacs said they had expected something much tougher and nuder. The sight-seer from the Midwest admitted she was somewhat confused, especially after austere London, but insisted she was having a wonderful time. Sgt. and Mrs. Dorgan decided the revue was extremely artistic.

Young Frank Jones, 2nd, was pretty enthusiastic over the slapstick comedy and the Greek athletes. But when the dancing girls performed, he just chewed gum.

Danger Signals Flying In Forests

By DAVID DRIVER

THE forest fire season is here. May 1 was the formal opening date for the forest fire season in British Columbia and it means that campfire permits are necessary and special care must be exercised in use of fire in or near the forests which form the greatest natural resource of the province.

Now being whipped into full efficiency is the big, highly trained fire-fighting force of the British Columbia Forest Service. It covers the province from the west coast of Vancouver and the Queen Charlotte Islands to the summits of the Rockies and from the U.S.-Canadian boundary far into the northern Peace River district. At the disposal of this organization is almost every modern means of transportation and communication.

* * *

Radio is the most common medium of communication used by the forest service's fire-fighting division. This year the forest service will operate a network of 346 stations—probably the largest radio network in the nation.

Headquarters of the network is here in Victoria behind the Parliament Buildings. The network includes many portable sets, some of which will be carried on the backs of fire fighters into fire areas so that constant touch with forest district headquarters may be maintained by the fire fighters. Other stations of the forest service's network are on ships plying the coast so that the rangers aboard may be in constant touch with headquarters. Still others are in lookout stations so that the lookout men may notify the rangers of fire outbreaks.

* * *

As well as dozens of lookout stations which spot the fires in areas of known fire hazard the forest service this year will use half a dozen aircraft in spotting and fighting forest fires. These craft are provided on contract by Central B.C. Airways and will be stationed at Prince George and Fort St. John and in the Kamloops and Nelson forest districts.

Besides these aircraft in the interior of the province the forest service if need be will hire other aircraft on the coast. Also available if needed, will be a helicopter.

For the most part the transportation of the firefighting units of the forest service is by truck. Scores of vehicles of all sizes are available to transport forest fire fighters and equipment to and from fires.

* * *

Determining the weather and humidity of the forests is an important part of the fire fighting section of the service and dozens of units are maintained in which the temperature and humidity of the atmosphere and the forest refuse is recorded. This service, integrated with the Dominion government's weather service, makes it possible for forest protection officers to determine the forest fire hazard, tell logging operators and others of danger periods and if necessary close the forests to the public and halt logging operations during periods of extreme hazard.

The actual spotting of fires is done by the forest's lookout services and others. Dozens of lookouts are maintained on mountains and hills at strategic points throughout the province.

The first line of defence of the service is the suppression crew, a 12-man unit designed to strike with maximum speed when fires are reported. If unable to extinguish a forest fire the suppression crew is maintained at the scene until a larger force with heavier equipment arrives to take over.

Originally incorporated in the forest protection service five years ago when the main fire fighting units were depleted because of the war, the suppression crew has become an integral part of the forest fire fighting organization. But its character has been changed since then.

* * *

High school and college students on their summer vacations were used extensively in the first suppression crews but now older men make up the crews for the most part although some students with previous experience will be used again this year.

Four such crews will be maintained on Vancouver Island when the fire hazard increases as the summer approaches. They will be stationed at Langford, Nanaimo, Parksville and Campbell River.

But one large forest fire has been reported to date in the province. It was in the Nelson district about two weeks ago and burned 160 acres before brought under control and extinguished.

At the forest service's ranger school at Green Timbers 14 lookout men in a few days will start a refresher course in preparation for the forest fire season.

Protection officers express the hope the 1948 fire season will be a replica of the 1947 season when the loss to forest fires was the lowest in many years and no major forest closures were necessary because of extreme fire hazard.

The officers ask all persons entering forest lands to use every care, especially with matches and cigarette butts. Persons traveling by motor car get in the habit during the wet weather of tossing lighted butts on to the roadway. This should not be done from now on.

Jack Paar Finally Gets A Part

By ERSKINE JOHNSON

HOLLYWOOD—Two years ago, Jack Parr, the radio comic, signed an RKO movie contract and was ordered to rush out to Hollywood from his home in Cleveland.

"Can I stop at Albuquerque for a couple of days?" he asked.

"Absolutely not," said the studio. "We need you right away."

This week, 730 days later, Jack Paar is working in his first movie, "Weep No More," with Joseph Cotten and Valli.

Jack said he asked to be loaned out during those two years. "But," he said, "no other studio would make the $5 deposit."

M-G-M, which two years ago let William Lundigan out of a studio contract, may regret it. He's testing for the plum Monte Stratton role at five times the salary M-G-M once paid him.

All you have to do in Hollywood is demand a release from your contract and—boom—everyone's after you. Well, anyway, that's what happened to Bob Preston. For years Bob fought for good roles at Paramount and when nothing happened he demanded that the studio release him from his contract. Now Paramount is trying to get him back on the lot to co-star with Paulette Goddard in "Lucrezia Borgia."

A $200,000 NOSE

Hedy Lamarr, I can report, has a very lovely nose—even if it was stuffed up a little. Hedy had a spring cold in her heady.

Frankly, I hadn't noticed Hedy's nose (could it be that Jane Russell has a nose, too) until she filed suit for $200,000, charging that a national magazine maligned it as a plastic surgery job.

So I went out and got a good look.

It looked fine. A very beautiful nose. No traces of plastic surgery at all.

Hedy reached for a handkerchief and daintily blew her $200,000 nose while her lawyer, Jerry Giesler, winced. After all, there aren't very many $200,000 noses.

She kills the boy in self-defence but, more important, we're point-out out that her job as a school teacher has nothing to do with it. Bridge At Its Best

By W. E. McKENNEY, America's Card Authority

'NORTH' DOES A BIT OF QUIET TRAPPING

ONE of the most interesting developments in tournament bridge in recent years is commercial and industrial games, part of their personnel activities. Nineteen such teams entered the Eastern States contest, won by the team representing New York Board of Education: Morton Friedman, George Becker, S. Seidman, Max Kitt.

I was kibitzing George Becker when he played the hand shown here. When West bid a spade and Becker failed to overcall with two diamonds I took a second look at his hand. He later said he felt sure one spade would not be the final contract, and he decided to do a little trapping.

When East bid two spades and West bid three clubs, I did not approve of Becker's pass, but again he felt that if he did not interfere the opponents would place the missing high cards in each other's hands.

That is exactly what East did when he elected to bid three spades rather than four clubs.

Becker shifted to a small diamond, West won with the ace and led a club. Becker trumped this with the four of spades, cashed the king of diamonds and led a small diamond. West trumped with the deuce of spades and led another club, which Becker trumped with the six of spades. The 10 of diamonds was led, declarer trumped with the three of spades, led another club and Becker trumped with the jack of spades.

Then he made a nice play, the lead of the nine of diamonds. Declarer discarded a club from dummy, South trumped with the queen of spades — and Becker still made his spade ace.

TRUMPING OPENING LEAD IS QUESTION

WHEN I retired as executive secretary of the American Contract Bridge League on the first of the year after 20 years of service, Curt H. Reisinger of New York, an old friend, was elected secretary.

Reisinger was treasurer of War Orphans Scholarships, Inc., and vice-president of Children's Cancer Fund, Inc.

In practically every case the diamond king was opened. With the ace of clubs opening declarer would have no problem, but with the diamond opening there was a question as to proper play.

Should declarer win the first diamond with the ace, or should it be trumped in dummy?

It was generally agreed that the king of diamonds should be trumped in dummy with the deuce of spades, and the next play should be the deuce of clubs, trumping in the West hand with the three of spades. Then a small spade should be led to dummy's ace and South's jack falls.

Analysis shows that the correct play at this point is to lead the three of clubs and trump it with the queen of spades, then lead the seven of spades and win it in dummy with the nine. Lead the five of clubs and trump it with the king of spades. Now the ace of clubs drops, and declarer makes seven.

Opening—♠ 9 30

FRED HIRSCH, playing with Harry J. Fishbein in the Eastern States Tournament in New York, had to use early-play larceny to make this hand.

East made the normal opening lead of the nine of spades. If he had opened a heart it would have been possible for East and West to cash five hearts and the ace of diamonds. But leading from the king-jack-nine against a no trump contract is a little difficult.

The spade lead was won in dummy with the queen. Hirsch (North) saw that he could cash four spades and four clubs, but how could he get his ninth trick? As soon as the opponents got in with the ace of diamonds, they would run the heart suit.

He decided to try to steal a trick, so he led a small diamond from dummy. Sure enough West played low, and Hirsch went in with the jack. Then he just went ahead and cashed his four clubs and the other three spade tricks.

If he had run the club suit first West undoubtedly would have jumped right in with the ace on the first diamond lead in order to grab off the heart suit.

Fashion Demands Attention To Detail

Beauty's Ballet

Exercises Use Ballerina's Steps To Reshape Figures

Her dancing skirts which bell from tiny waistbands have influenced fashions in dress. Her wasp-waisted figure has become the ideal of girls who, in order to wear ballerina fashions well, are anxious to cinch in waistlines to fit.

If you need to cinch in your waistline with exercise, here are three ballet-borrowed routines which Ann Delafield claims will work. This director of a famous success course uses the following routines in daily classwork to reshape figures to fit new fashions.

The third exercise is a tough one to do. Miss Delafield warns you to take this one easy, standing firm-footed on a floor which isn't slick and on which there is no scatter rug which might slip out from under you and cause a nasty fall. She reminds you also that this exercise, in imitation of the ballerina's bar work, needs working up to slowly. So go easy. Take a stance like that described for the foregoing exercise and as a substitute for the ballerina's bar use a sturdy high-backed over-stuffed chair on which to prop your foot as you alternately swing your legs.

Before swinging, stand with arms in front of you in a curved position with fingers turned toward each other. With weight on left foot, bend backwards as far as you can stretch your torso and swing right leg to the chair top where you can prop your foot. Go back to position, and repeat exercise swinging the other leg to the chair.

Skin Looks Fresh Under White Hat

An immaculate white hat is one of the most dependable accessories a woman can use to bring out the full pinkness of her skin, to heighten the color of her eyes, to make a skin look more daisy-fresh.

White hats, which so many women think they shouldn't wear, are better able to do all of these things than pastel-colored hats, which so many women think are safer. Pastel tints worn above the face never seem to look as spactacularly fresh as white and quite often behave perversely and flag onlookers' eyes to fading skin tones.

Besides relieving all-black or all-navy costumes and besides making a woman's face look fresh, immaculate white hats seem to have a lifting effect on feminine morale. Ask any woman who wears one. Or simply watch a woman to see if she doesn't perk up under a flattering white hat.

It's not what you wear—on your face; it's how you wear it! To give emphasis to pale lashes put a little lubricant on upper lids as close to the lashes as possible. Darken edge of lids with a sharp eyebrow pencil and with fingers force color down on lashes. Apply eye shadow lightly to lower edges of upper lids and shade subtly up and out.

Neatness Is Essential For Girl Who Lives In Crowded Quarters

Don't be the kind of girl whose untidy habits cause her family despair or threaten to alienate a roommate.

If you are given to such careless habits as wrecking a bathroom, cramming clothes into bureau drawers or closing doors on closet disorder, start while you're young to take yourself in hand. You'll discover that tidier habits will make living in crowded quarters easier for you; more pleasant for people who must share them with you.

One way to take yourself in hand is to begin restoring order in the bathroom after you use it. Be just as careful to pick up after yourself; to hang up your clothes; to pull order out of any confusion that may exist in your closet or bureau drawers.

One criterion of this new discipline is how tidy are the contents of the dressing table drawers that you use every day? You can pass the neatness test by first lining the drawers with fresh paper; then by keeping cosmetic jars in regimented rows. While you're at this business, herd your cosmetic gadgets into neat little boxes. Keep facial tissues in a neat stack; powder puffs in their own "wardrobe case."

Ready to abet the order-loving girl in her practice of tidier habits are powder puff wardrobes which provide a supply of puffs in compartmented plastic cases. As puffs are used up, these see-through plastic cases can be put into use as neat containers for stockings, handkerchiefs or hair-ribbons.

Graceful Habits Are Style Test

If you pooh-pooh these things as trifles, you should sit in at a session where fashion models rehearse these practiced arts. None is taken for granted.

A jacket isn't removed until a model settles in her chair and puts down her bag. Then, she slips her jacket off one shoulder at a time, and either drops it behind her on the back of her chair or presents it to her hostess. But she hands it over as though it were a prized possession, not as something to gather into a heap and try to disown.

As for the handbag, you rarely see a fashion model posed without one. But she practices the knack of carrying it smartly, not as something to dangle from her wrist like a boxer's glove, or like a package she is trying to hide.

Disguise Blemish With Foundation

Even the best planned beauty care won't prevent an occasional bump from cropping up to spoil the smooth surface of your skin. Sometimes it is caused by too many sweets; other times bodily functions are slightly upset—in any event, it is mightily discouraging when the pesky thing blossoms forth just before an important date.

But your misery will be less if you learn the art of camouflage and to keep a jar of heavy foundation cream handy to mask the spot for the evening. Before you go to bed, remove your make-up thoroughly and dab a bit of healing medicated cream over the area.

After it has healed, a slight discoloration often lingers as an unpleasant reminder of your trouble. But brisk patting of the area will stimulate the circulation and help banish the condition.

Planned Meals Pay Off In Health, Economy

Rich Dessert Needs Little Sugar

For a gala dessert that goes easy on sugar, buy a cake ring at the bakers and a quart of vanilla from the ice cream store. No sugar needed so far. Next make fruit nectar sauce—it takes only 1-3 cup of sugar. For so exceptional a dessert that is nothing.

Apples or any fruit in season can be used together or separately, in the basic recipe given below.

FRUIT NECTAR SAUCE

One tablespoon cornstarch, ⅓ cup sugar, 1 cup boiling water, salt, few grains, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 1½ cups diced fresh fruit, or fresh frozen mixed fruit.

Mix cornstarch and sugar. Add boiling water and salt; boil, stirring constantly, until thick and clear (about 5 minutes). Continue cooking over hot water for 20 minutes. Remove from heat. Add lemon juice and mix in fruit. Chill before serving. If you use fresh frozen fruit, drain off liquid and heat; use it to replace boiling water. If you use apples, cut in large cubes without removing the skins. If you use grapes, they should be cut in half and seeds removed. If you use pears, they should be peeled and diced. (Makes about 2 cups.)

KRINKLE COOKIES

Two egg whites, ⅓ cup brown sugar, ½ cup light corn syrup, ½ cup sifted flour, 4 cups chopped popped corn, 1 cup toasted chopped Brazil nuts.

Beat egg whites stiff and gradually beat in sugar and corn syrup. Fold in flour, popped corn and half the Brazil nuts. Drop by spoonfuls onto greased baking dish, sprinkle with remaining Brazil nuts and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) for 15 minutes. (Makes 3 dozen.)

Fish Omelet

Two cups flaked, cooked fish 2 tablespoons lemon juice, 4 eggs (separated), ½ cup milk, 2 tablespoons minced onion, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, ⅛ teaspoon pepper, ¾ teaspoon salt, 1 cup corn flakes, 2 teaspoons butter.

Sprinkle lemon juice over fish. Beat egg yolks until very thick; carefully fold in milk, onion, parsley, pepper and salt. Pour into hot greased frying pan. Top with finely crushed corn flakes mixed with melted butter. Bake in moderate oven (375 degrees F.) about 20 minutes. Yield: Four-six servings.

Scandinavian Fish Recipes

SALMON, SCANDINAVIAN STYLE

One tablespoon minced onion, 1 tablespoon butter, 2 tablespoons flour, 1 can condensed mushroom soup, ¾ cup beer (if desired), ½ teaspoon salt, few grains pepper, 1 pound can salmon, boned and flaked, 2 hard-cooked eggs, diced, 1 cup rice, 2 tablespoons butter.

Cook onion in butter until lightly browned; add flour and blend. Gradually add mushroom soup and beer (if desired). If beer is used, open container about 15 minutes before adding to other ingredients. Cook over low heat until thickened, stirring constantly. Season with salt and pepper. Add flaked salmon and diced hard-cooked eggs. Cook 1 cup rice in boiling salted water until tender; drain. Add 2 tablespoons butter and blend with fork; pack into buttered ring mold and turn out on hot serving plate. Fill hot rice ring with salmon mixture. (Serves 6.)

FILLETS, SCANDINAVIAN STYLE

Three pounds fillet of haddock, 2 large onions, chopped, ¼ cup butter, 2 tablespoons flour, 1 bottle beer (if desired), 2 tablespoons brown sugar, 5 peppercorns, 2 cloves, 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, 1 tablespoon vinegar.

Cut fillets in serving size pieces. Brown onions in butter; add flour; cook 3 minutes. Add beer (if desired) and remaining ingredients except vinegar. Cook over low heat, stirring, until thickened. Add fillets, cover and cook until fish is done. Add vinegar; cook 2 minutes longer. Remove fish to platter. Strain sauce and serve separately. (Serves 6-8.)

Almond Maple Pie

Luscious one-cruster pies are favorities for spring. Accent the prune and almond filling with both maple and lemon to give it this refreshing flavor. Serve it cold.

ALMOND MAPLE PIE

Two-thirds cup blanched almonds, 1½ cups sliced pitted cooked prunes, ½ cup maple-flavored syrup, ½ cup granulated sugar, 1 cup cooking liquid from prunes, 3 tablespoons butter, ½ teaspoon salt, 3 tablespoons cornstarch, 4 teaspoons lemon juice, ¼ teaspoon maple flavoring, pastry for single 9-inch crust.

Chop almonds and combine with prunes, syrup, sugar, prune liquid, butter, salt, cornstarch and lemon juice. Bring to a boil and cook and stir 3 or 4 minutes. Cool slightly, and stir in flavoring. Pour into pastry-lined pie pan. Bake in very hot oven (450 degrees F.) 25 to 30 minutes. Cool before cutting. (Serves 6 to 8.)

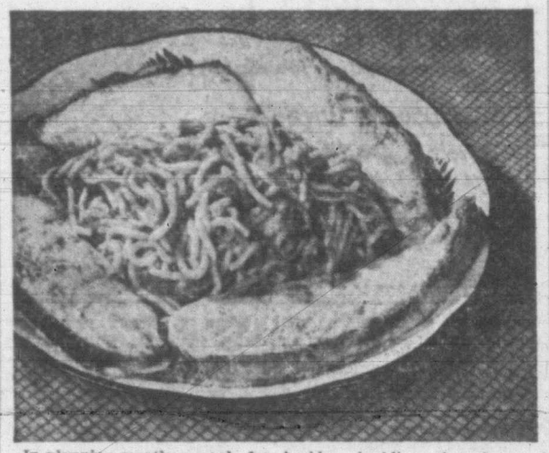
Rice Custard With Peaches

Four canned peach halves, 2 cups milk, 1¼ cups cooked rice, ¼ teaspoon salt, ½ cup granulated sugar, 2 eggs, ½ teaspoon vanilla extract, ¼ cup granulated sugar for meringue.

Drain peaches; cut into cubes. Add to milk and heat thoroughly over hot water. Add rice, salt and sugar, and cook five minutes. Pour some of the mixture over slightly beaten egg yolks and stir into remaining mixture. Return to heat and cook two or three minutes longer. Add flavoring. Pour into baking dish. Cover with meringue made of egg whites and ¼ cup sugar. Brown in moderately slow oven (325 degrees F.) 25 minutes. Chill. (Serves six.)

Easy to Make—Here's a pie that's easy to make. Prepare packaged vanilla pudding with apricot whole fruit nectar for the liquid, pour into a graham cracker shell and chill well before serving.

Short-Cut Supper



In planning meatless meals for this month be sure to put halibut steak and spaghetti on your favorite, substantial supper-dish list. Halibut and spaghetti are perfect partners on a platter; they have the kinds of flavors that were meant to merge together. Halibut, you know, is a lean, boneless fish that needs a good, rich sauce to bring out the delicate overtones of its flavor.

Now, you may, if you wish, concoct a special sauce from the condiments and relishes in your refrigerator and on your pantry shelf. But you can save yourself a world of time and trouble, besides doubling the size and savor of this dish, by serving spaghetti with the halibut instead.

Be sure to get the fully prepared spaghetti that comes already cooked and packed in cans. Spaghetti made to an epicure's taste—not too hard, and not too soft—with every tender, succulent strand simmered in a rich and racy tomato sauce well flavored with some robust cheese. You'll find the tomato sauce on this spaghetti has just the right amount of spice and savor to enhance the flavor of the fish. And besides, spaghetti will give you extra value in this dish, for, if you want to serve a short-cut supper, spaghetti will double for potatoes on the platter. Here's how:

HALIBUT STEAK, SPAGHETTI

Heat spaghetti in saucepan. Serve on platter with fish on one half and spaghetti on the other.

TO PAN FRY FISH

Allow sufficient fat to cover the bottom of frying pan, about ¼-in. in depth when melted. Have fat hot, and not smoking, before putting in fish. Cook until fish is tender and well done (approx. 6 to 10 mins.). Fish is cooked when it can easily be pricked with fork.

Tastes Delicious—The next time savory stuffed cabbage rolls are on the menu include wedges of ripe olives with the hamburger-rice mixture. It makes them more delicious than ever.

Apple Crisp—Five cups sliced apples, ¼ cup honey, 2 teaspoons lemon juice, 3 shredded wheat biscuits, finely rolled, 3 tablespoons flour, ¼ cup sugar, ½ teaspoon cinnamon, 2 tablespoons butter, salt, light cream. Place apples in greased casserole; pour over them honey and lemon juice. Mix together shredded wheat, flour, sugar, cinnamon, butter or margarine and salt. Sprinkle over apples. Bake in hot oven (400 degrees F.) 40 minutes. Serve with cream. Serves 4 to 6.

Lemon Cream Pie

Half cup sugar; 2½ tablespoons cornstarch or 5 tablespoons all-purpose flour; ⅛ teaspoon salt; 1½ cups milk; 2 egg yolks, well beaten; ¼ cup lemon juice; ¼ teaspoon grated lemon rind; 1 baked 9-inch pie shell; 2 egg whites; 2 tablespoons sugar.

Combine sugar, cornstarch or flour, salt, milk and beaten egg yolks and cook in top of double boiler until thick, stirring frequently. Add lemon juice and rind. Cool custard slightly. Fill baked pie shell. Top with a meringue made from the 2 egg whites and 2 tablespoons sugar and brown in a moderately slow oven 325 deg. F. Yield: one 9-inch pie.

Moulded Egg Salad

Moulded Egg Salad—Ingredients: One tablespoon plain gelatin, ¼ cup cold water, 1½ cups boiling water, 2 tablespoons vinegar, 1 teaspoon salt, hard-cooked eggs (sliced), 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, 3 tablespoons chopped pickle, 1 tablespoon grated onion.

Soften the gelatin in the cold water. Add boiling water, vinegar and salt. When the gelatin mixture begins to stiffen add the remaining ingredients. Pour into wet moulds and chill. Serve on lettuce leaves and garnish with mayonnaise.

Cheese Croquettes

One and one-third rolled oats, 1⅔ cups boiling water, ¾ teaspoon salt, ½ cup grated cheese, 1 teaspoon chopped parsley, 1 teaspoon grated onion, few grains pepper, 2 chopped, hard-cooked eggs, and ½ cup dry bread crumbs or oatmeal.

Gradually stir rolled oats into boiling, salted water, stirring constantly for about 5 minutes. Add cheese and stir until melted. Remove from heat and beat thoroughly until very smooth. Add chopped parsley, onion, pepper and eggs. Chill mixture 1 hour. Shape into round flat patties, roll in dry bread crumbs or oatmeal and pan-fry until nicely browned on both sides. Serve hot with sauce or relish. Yield: Six servings.

Whole Wheat Nut Bread

A whole wheat nut bread made with molasses and baking powder is a balancing accompaniment to a spring luncheon salad. It is simple enough to make and it is "different" and nutritious as well.

WHOLE WHEAT NUT BREAD

Two tablespoons brown sugar, 2 cups whole wheat flour, 1 cup sifted all-purpose flour, ¾ teaspoon baking soda, 2½ teaspoons baking powder, 1¾ teaspoons salt, ¾ cup milk, ¾ cup water, ⅔ cup molasses, 1 cup chopped walnut meats.

Mix together sugar, flour, baking soda, backing powder and salt. Combine milk, water and molasses; add to dry ingredients. Mix smooth. Add nut meats. Pour into 9¼ x 5¼ x 2½ in. greased loaf pan. Let stand 20 minutes. Bake in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) 1½ hours. Cool 5 minutes. Remove from pan. Cool. Bread will slice in uniformly thin slices if stored overnight.

Gingerbread goes well with spring berries or stewed dried fruits. But too often recipes are so large they become impractical for the smaller family. However, this recipe was created especially for the small family, as it yields 6 portions.

SMALL-FAMILY GINGERBREAD

One-quarter cup shortening, ¼ cup sugar, 1 egg, 1¼ cups sifted all-purpose flour, ¾ teaspoon baking soda, ½ teaspoon cinnamon, ½ teaspoon ginger, ¼ teaspoon cloves, ¼ teaspoon salt, ⅓ cup molasses, ½ cup hot water.

Cream together shortening and sugar. Add egg; beat well. Sift together flour, baking soda, cinnamon, ginger, cloves and salt. Combine molasses and water; add alternately with flour mixture to creamed mixture. Line 9½ x 5¼ x 2½ in. greased loaf pan with greased waxed paper; pour in batter. Bake in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) 45 minutes. Cool 5 minutes. Remove from pan. (Six portions.)

Diggin' In The Sand

A favorite pastime enjoyed by all youngsters is playing in a sandbox. After all other exhausting games have been played and there doesn't seem to be another fence or tree to climb, then it's time to build a few castles in the sand pile. Looking over the building "territory" are, left to right: Joan Thame, Carol Shields, Katherine Saddler, Pat McGoldrick, Andy McGoldrick, Jack Ready and Ronnie Peterson.

Boy Pianist Makes Good

By JAMES THRASHER

THE HERALD TRIBUNE critic called him "the most remarkable pianist encountered in 20 years of experience in reviewing music in this city."

"Among the outstanding keyboard artists of the present time," the New York Times review proclaimed. "A rarity among today's young virtuosos," said the New York Sun.

"There is one thing bothering me," the New York World-Telegram reviewer confessed. "Since he is so young he is bound to improve. But how much improvement can there be, after all?"

The target of these critical bouquets is a Hungarian lad named Ervin Laszlo, who won't be 16 until June. The men who tossed them, be it remembered, don't impress easily. Each year they hear scores of talented young musicians to whom a New York recital is what a big league tryout is to a rookie ballplayer. And a lot fewer rookie musicians than rookie ballplayers stay up in the big time.

* * *

ERVIN ARRIVED here from Europe with his mother three weeks before his debut recital this month. They wanted to come a year ago, but Mme. Laszlo was unable to get an American visa in Budapest. Last September they went to Geneva, where Ervin won the grand prize in piano at an international music competition. From Switzerland they went to Paris, where Mme. Laszlo encountered no difficulty in getting permission to come to the United States.

Away from the piano Ervin shows no distinguished marks of the musical prodigy. He is slight of build. But his hands, like his musical perception, already seem to have reached maturity. They are large and well muscled, with square-ended fingers—unmistakably the hands of a professional pianist.

Although he has known a little English since he was 10, Ervin has picked up most of his vocabulary during his short stay in New York. He now converses in the language with surprising ease, speaking it readily in a voice that has already begun to deepen.

* * *

YOUTHFUL geniuses are popularly supposed to be temperamental, nervous or otherwise off the beam of common folks' behavior. Ervin Laszlo does not fit the picture. He is relaxed, pleasant and thoroughly normal in manner. This is astonishing in view of his wartime experiences, which were of a kind to shock the mind and nerves even of a child of the most routine sensitivity.

A few months after Ervin had been admitted to the master classes of Erno Dohnanyi, the famous Hungarian pianist-composer, the Nazis occupied Budapest. His parents' apartment was taken over by the invaders and, since the Laszlos are Jewish, their freedom and lives were in danger.

Tse Swedish ambassador found Ervin and his mother a safe hiding place when his father, a lawyer and industrialist, was sent to Russia in a labor battalion made up of professional men. They were put to work clearing fields of land mines. Ervin's father lost a foot in a mine explosion, but he was more fortunate than most of his colleagues. Of the 250 in the battalion that set out for Russia, only six men returned three months later. The elder Laszlo had to spend a year in a hospital, but is now recovered and hopes to join his family here soon.

Ervin and his mother were given lodging on the third floor of a four-story residence on the Pest side of the Danube. The first and fourth floors were destroyed by bombs during the eight weeks of incessant day-and-night fighting after the Russians entered the city.

* * *

DAY AFTER DAY, Ervin says he would look out his window and see Nazi soldiers herd a group of Jewish children to the river bank, line them up, and mow them down with machine gun fire.

The intercession of the neutral Swedish diplomat probably saved Ervin, but he had to give up all thought of music during the 10 months of Nazi occupation. This was the first interruption in a career that began at five, when Ervin had his first piano lessons from his mother.

He learned all his mother could teach him in six months, and professional teachers took over from there. He made his first public appearance when he was nine, playing a Mozart concerto with a symphony orchestra in Budapest.

It was a full year after the Nazis came before Ervin could resume practicing, yet he gave a public recital only two months later. The program that he played in his New York debut—it included music by Bach, Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin, Debussy and Liszt — would have challenged the technical and interpretive powers of any top-ranking virtuoso. Yet this was only one of five recital programs which, along with six concertos, are at his fingertips and ready for public performance.

* * *

ERVIN'S American managers, Lawrence Evans and Kurt Weinhold, know what to do with a genius on their hands for they managed Yehudi Menuhin in the days of his phenomenal youth. Ervin will be handled much as Menuhin was — no exploitation, relatively few concert engagements, and careful supervision (he doesn't need "lessons") by one of the great keyboard artists while his musical gifts are ripening to their full power.

Ervin is delighted with what he has seen of America, and he and his family intend to make their home here. "It has always been my dream to live in America," the young pianist says.

One of the things Ervin likes best about his new country is the girls. And he isn't doing bad y, either, for he had himself a steady girl friend after only a couple of weeks in New York. She has taken him riding and on sight-seeing trips that include a visit to the top of the Empire State Building, and she has invited him to a high school party.

"She is very proud of him," Mme. Laszlo says. "Prouder than he is."

Ervin Laszlo In Action: At 16, Critics Wonder How He Can Do Better

Uncle Ray . . . Strange Forms Of Paper Money Have Been Used

THE CHINESE seem to have been the inventors of paper money. When Marco Polo traveled in China more than six and a half centuries ago, he found that money in the form of paper was passing from hand to hand.

At a later time in Europe, goldsmiths started the custom of writing promises that they would pay a certain number of coins when asked to do so. These promises were written on paper, and the pieces of paper were money of a sort.

Still later, the governments of nations in Europe began to print paper money. The money was a promise to pay. It was given the same legal value as metal coins when laws made it "legal tender." This meant that anyone could pay a debt with paper money, the same as with coins.

The paper money of the Mafeking Siege is of special interest. It was issued during the Boer War in South Africa, in a native village called Mafeking. The Boers laid siege to the British, who were encamped in and around the town.

* * *

THE SIEGE started in October, 1899, and ended seven months later. The British commander ordered a special kind of paper money to be issued. This money passed about freely, and it served its purpose during the long months of the siege. A British army came marching to the spot in May, 1900, and the Boers were driven away.

A strange form of paper money was used in Canada during a period of 65 years—from 1685 to 1750. This money was made from playing cards!

It so happened, in 1685, that money did not arrive from abroad for French soldiers in Canada. De Meulle, the man who was supposed to pay the soldiers, decided to issue money of his own. Since he did not have a printing press, he collected all the packs of cards he could find and cut them into pieces. Each card was cut into four pieces, and each piece—when duly signed—became a promise to pay as soon as money arrived from France.

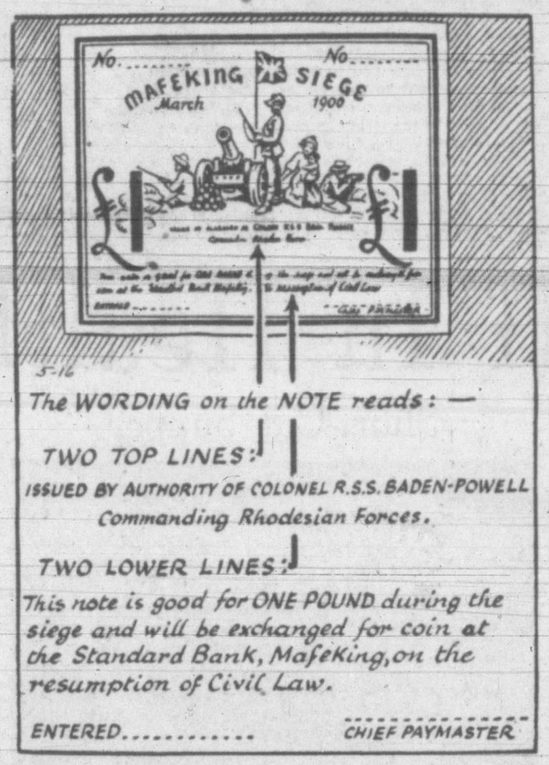
* * *

THE PIECES of card were accepted by traders as payment for supplies. In other words, they took the place of real money.

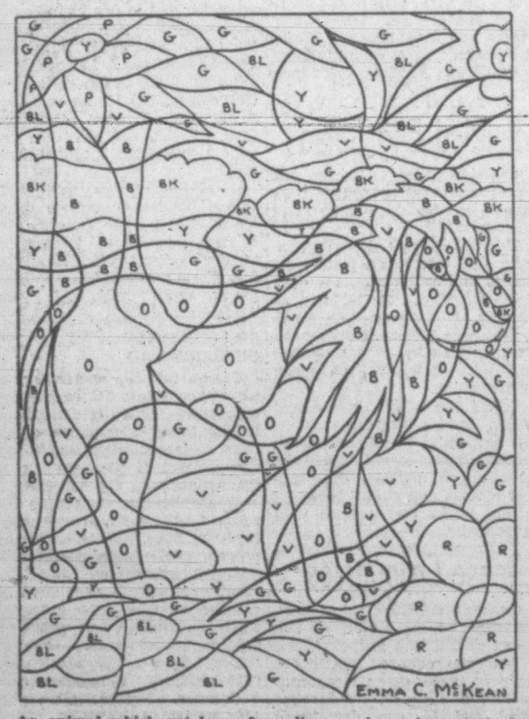
This plan worked so well that it was tried again and again in later years. Many persons in Canada besides the soldiers and traders made use of playing card money.

In Mongolia and Tibet, there are sections where "tea money" is employed. This is formed of tea which has been pressed into small bricks. Each brick carries an imprint which stands for a promise to pay a certain amount.

When a plague or famine comes to China, some of the Chinese try to protect themselves by burning paper which has been called "spirit money." Pieces of this paper are also cast into rivers. It is believed by some Chinese that such action will ward off the attacks of demons who are causing the trouble.



What Animal's On The Loose?



An animal which got loose from its cage in a circus train is hidden in this maze, as scared as you might be if you came face to face with it unwarned. To capture it, take crayons or colored pencils and shade each area according to its color symbol: G—green; Y—yellow; O—orange; R—red; V—violet; B—brown; BL—blue; BK—black; P—pink. For pink, use red lightly.

More Notes About Emanuel Swedenborg

PERHAPS you remember the stories we had about Emanuel Swedenborg in this column. Since then I have received quite a number of letters from followers of that interesting Swede, most of them saying they were pleased by the way I handled the subject.

A director of publicity for a Swedenborg group seems to be less well pleased. The Rev. Leslie Marshall wrote a letter saying that "there is no such strange statement in Swedenborg's writings as that if a person looks at Jesus through his right eye, he sees a bright sun, through the left, a moon."

If the Reverend Marshall will look at Section 118 of Swedenborg's work, "Heaven and Hell," he will see these words:

"Before the right eye, He appears exactly like a sun, as if of the same sort of fire, and of the same magnitude as the sun of this world: but before the left eye, He does not appear as a sun but as a moon."

Those words were written about Jesus, whom Swedenborg constantly calls "the Lord." Note the definition of "the Lord" in Section 24 of the same book:

"The Lord, in the world, was called Jesus."

Another translation of "Heaven and Hell" has a different wording, but the same idea is given in Section 118.

In regard to the question of whether Swedenborg invented an ear trumpet, I suggest that this reader study a paragraph on page 267 of the biography published by the Swedenborg Foundation, New York City. In that paragraph are the words:

"In his 'Daedalus,' there is a description of a new ear trumpet for the dead. . . . To Swedenborg also is due the first conception of a tank in which to test models of ships."

Swedenborg had a friend named Christopher Pothem, and these two men talked oer with each other the inventions they had in mind. In the case of the ear trumpet, Swedenborg published the first account of it, also drawings, but gave credit to Polhem for its invention. The paragraph in the Swedenborg Foundation biography from which I have quoted should be revised to give Polhem his proper share of the honor.

The Case Of The Blue Hat Mystery

By MARY L. AKSIM

"BUT what's she like, Bob?" Doris pleaded, as he handed her the letter.

Bob shrugged. "You'll see soon enough. The letter says at three tomorrow afternoon. It must be you she's coming to see! Anyone would know I'd be at the office then."

He turned back to his breakfast as Doris followed the neat black lines of the letter impatiently. Why, oh why, she agonized inwardly, did this old friend of Bob's have to choose this week of all weeks? She would have to give the house the thorough cleaning she had been postponing since the twins came down with whooping cough, and perhaps invite one or two of their friends to meet the visitor. Yes, that would be the best plan, she decided. She'd call Ellen, and perhaps Margaret. That would keep the conversation flowing until Bob could take over. She laid down the letter.

"Did you know her very well?" she asked innocently.

"And after?"

"Oh, after? There wasn't much. Just a few baseball games. Cant' think why she wants to look me up."

"Mother!" That was Garry calling. Then Ted was making croaking sounds. Doris rose wearily. "Well, you might take your old friend out to dinner," she suggested.

Bob reflected. "That might be a good idea!" he said.

* * *

AS SOON as the boys were settled, Doris sat down at the telephone. Ellen and Margaret both could come, and they responded to her suggestion that they dress for the occasion.

"She's an old girl friend of Bob's," Doris told them. "And she's fresh from a dress designers' conference in New York."

She studied herself thoughtfully in the hall mirror as she went to take the vacuum cleaner from the closet. Certainly she was not at her best this morning. But she'd like to see Gertie Westaway after she'd been waiting on a pair of seven-year-olds with the whooping cough. But Bob had certainly jumped at the chance to take Gertie to dinner! How well had they known each other? The thought kept darting at her happiness all day. She answered the twins' demands and cleaned the house and prepared dinner, but when she sat at the table with Bob her appetite had left her.

Three o'clock the next day found Doris nervous but prettily gowned in a polished living-room waiting for the bell to announce her guests. The boys were united in their own room again and she had allowed them to keep the cat to amuse them. The doorbell rang and she stole a last glance in the mirror to reassure herself.

* * *

GERTIE WESTAWAY stood on the doorstep and Doris felt for a moment as if she were addressing one of the advertisements in a magazine. The vision was all in a charming shade of blue from her hat, upon which a bluebird poised, to a swath of blue gauze around her throat, to a beautifully cut tailored suit. Doris threw the door wide and breathlessly introduced herself.

"Oh, yes," laughed Gertie on a high note of gaiety. "Bob always wanted to get married!"

Ellen and Margaret arrived at that moment and Doris piloted them to the guest room to remove their hats and gloves. She could read approval of Gertie in her friends' faces as the afternoon slipped by. Bob was home before Margaret and Ellen said good-bye and there was much good-natured teasing as he came into the room.

When her friends left, Doris and Bob and Gertie sat on and the talk turned to schooldays and friends back home in Bob's home town. Doris waited nerously for Bob to suggest taking Gertie to dinner uptown, but he seemed to have forgotten about it. She reviewed mentally the contents of the refrigerator and was just about to mention dinner when Gertie rose to go.

* * *

THEY went up the stairs to the guest room, past gusts of very healthy-sounding laughter from the twins' room, and Doris explained about the whooping-cough. Gertie made the conventional sounds of sympathy and sat down at the dressing table to smooth her hair before adjusting the bluebird masterpiece.

Doris noticed it the moment Gertie turned to the mirror. The bare space on the bed where the blue hat had been! She swayed weakly as Gertie went on talking with her back towards her. Surreptitiously, she swept her hand behind the bed to see if the hat could have dropped from the spread. And then a dreadful suspicion put strength into her limbs. Those giggles from the boys' room! She was across the hall like a vengeful fury.

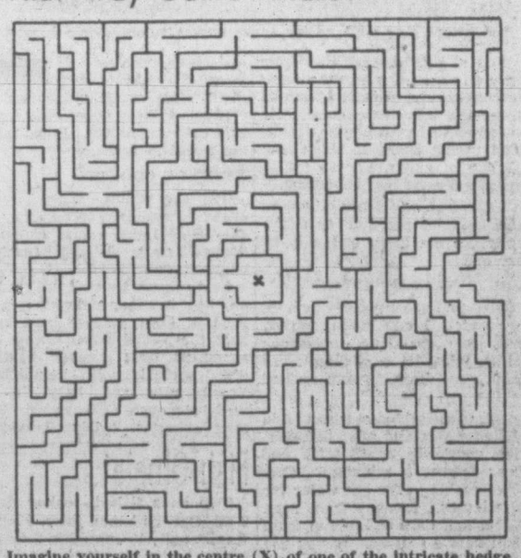
And there on Garry's bed was the blue hat and the bluebird was without its tail and many of its feathers! The cat! She tried to hush the twins' hysterical outbursts.

Doris went abjectly back to Gertie and tried to explain and called Bob upstairs to make some monosyllabic apologies which came perilously close to exposing his own amusement. Gertie said nothing at all. She looked at Bob as if she was seeing him for the first time.

Doris couldn't blame her for the cold way she went down the stairs and out through the hall to her car carrying her ravaged millinery tenderly. And when she door was closed she scolded Bob and the twins energetically and with tell ing effect.

But her heart was lighter than it had been for two days.

What Way Out Of Maze?



Imagine yourself in the centre (X) of one of the intricate hedge mazes constructed in an old English garden. Take a pencil and see how quickly you can find your way to the exit. Running into a dead-end and having to retrace steps counts a point against you. If you emerge with fewer than two points accumulated, you're exceptional.

Spraying Prevents Insect Infestation

By CECIL SOLLY

THERE IS A right and wrong time to spray roses. Here, the right time is in the early morning. Never spray rose bushes in the afternoon. When spraying, be sure to use a spray can with a nozzle which makes a very fine, misty spray. Thoroughly cover the buds, stems and front and back of all leaves. Also the soil around each bush should be given its share. In my own garden I have found that a two or three-gallon pressure sprayer is the most suitable.

It is most important, here in the Pacific Northwest rose garden, to realize that insects and diseases both live in the vacant lots and wild field and woody areas. At certain times, decided by old Dame Nature, these troubles naturally migrate by flying or floating on the wind, into your rose garden. Nothing we can do will stop their coming. All we can do is to destroy them when they arrive. To be sure of this, the rose bushes must be sprayed at least every ten days. Every week is better. The reason for this is that new growth is continually being produced and this tender tasty new growth will be immediately infested if left unprotected.

Some gardeners use powders for dusting instead of spraying, but this makes the bushes look so unattractive that liquid spraying is much more satisfactory. In fact, liquid sprays enhance the appearance of the bushes.

* * *

AS STATED previously, all healthy, well-fed rose bushes will be much less likely to suffer from any insect infestation, especially that of aphids, or "greenfly," as they are so often termed.

There are nine different kinds of aphis which infest roses. Besides aphis, roses are attacked by a curculio or snout beetle and a grub, both of which eat holes in the buds; thrips, which cause the flowers to appear as if they had been scaled; slugworms, which skeletonize the leaves; and leaf roller caterpillars. All of these pests have most interesting and entirely variant habits of life and reproduction. However (thank goodness), their cure and elimination is practically the same. All growers of fine roses know that "prevention is better than cure" and it certainly assures us of better-looking plants.

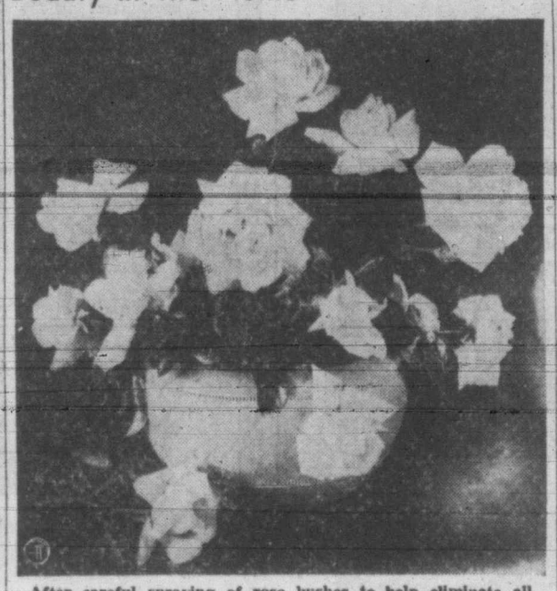
Well-fed, healthy rose bushes that are not accidentally wetted when sprinkling other parts of the garden seldom suffer from diseases here. There are only two bad ones—powdery mildew and black spot—and if they appear on your bushes by all means spray at once to control them, but be sure to realize that by bettering your feeding program much future trouble may be prevented. Both these diseases—mildew and black spot—are types of fungus which live as parasites on the plant. They multiply and spread with great rapidity. Once they have secured a hold on any plant the damage is greater than is apparent because they cause the leaves to cease in their function of a food factory which changes the food sent up from the roots into the necessary materials to grow good roses. Diseased plants quickly become weaker by the attack and this weakness leaves them a prey to insects. It also interrupts their normal functions, such as ripening of wood in fall and production of new branches in summer.

I think the prevention and control of disease in roses is the most important of all cultural items.

The best spray material to use for diseases is the Greenol mentioned previously. Its content of copper and many other items to which the diseases are allergic makes its use most satisfactory, but, again, it must be repeated, that since roses grow continuously all season and make new growth daily, this new growth must not be left long unprotected or it will form a landing place for the disease spores. As for insects, spray about once a week.

Since the insect sprays and the disease sprays are intended to be mixed so as to do both jobs at once, the work is not so hard as it would seem.

Beauty In The Home



After careful spraying of rose bushes to help eliminate all garden pests and preventing sprays of water being sprinkled on the leaves, it isn't long before a bowlful of roses, like the one pictured above, will grace a dining-room table and other rooms in the home. Cecil Solly's column this week gives more detail on spraying roses, combating insect attacks, correct methods of watering, and preparation of soil.

THE EXACT amount of water that is required by a rose bush depends somewhat on the condition of the soil in which it is growing. If there is a sufficient natural supply of moisture, nothing could be better. When the rose roots penetrate very deeply into soil that is not too dry and sandy, there should be no need to water at all. All roses should be planted right out in the open. Their type of leaf structure is a plain evidence of this fact. If, however, they are grown where a nearby house or tree cuts off the direct afternoon sun's rays, it is noticeable that the leaves are more lush and larger and the bush does not need so much water, since transpiration is not so great.

The simplest and most effective way to provide any water that the bushes may need is to place an inverted drain pipe or tile at the upper end of the rose garden. It should be buried so that only the rim of the top shows out of the soil. When and if water is needed, the nose of the hose should be placed in the "pipe" and water allowed to run slowly for several hours, to thoroughly soak the sub-soil. By doing this, the water will be delivered deeply below ground level, where the roots are waiting to take it up. When this "seeping pipe" system of sub-irrigation is used, a few pounds of commercial fertilizer may be placed in the pipe, too. This will dissolve slowly in the water as it is used and avoid waste by carrying food where it is most needed. If the "pipe" is located anywhere near the kitchen door, dishwater and water in which vegetables have been cooked may well be utilized for the roses instead of wasting it down the sink.

There is one important point which must be very carefully noticed when watering. Never sprinkle the rose garden, and take care to not even sprinkle the adjoining or adjacent flowers or lawn with cold water while the sun is out or the nearby roses will be sure to get mildew. On no account ever allow any water to get sprinkled on the leaves of the rose bushes. They should be dry to be healthy.

* * *

Foreign Roots. When the rose bed is properly prepared with rich soil, the roots from neighboring trees, shrubs and some plants are sure to spread into the bed and forage for food. This must be prevented by cutting down a full spade's depth all around the rose bed several times a year to sever the marauding roots. Where possible, trace any roots found in the rose bed back to the tree or shrub from which they start. Remove them by cutting them at the source rather than by continually fighting them and the recurrent crop of new roots that spring from where the old ones are severed

Dog Notes

By PETER BOGGS

INTERMITTENTLY newspapers relate a story about a human foundling being left on a doorstep with a pathetic note pinned to his clothes. Here is a case in which the waif was not a baby but a dog.

A few years ago in Shell Knob, Missouri, Rev. Charles Van Zandt started to enter his automobile after a pastoral call. As he opened the car door, he found a furry and friendly brown dog curled up on the front seat. Tied to its collar was a note which read:

"Won't you please give me a home? I am good-natured, three and one half years old, and need a home. My name is Brownie and I ll do tricks for you. Please don't scold me. I love children." This appeal was written in a childish scrawl and many words were misspelled.

The minister had a dog of his own but accepted the responsibility which some youngster had thrust upon him by taking the dog as his charge. He inquired among his friends and soon placed Brownie in a new home. Shortly afterwards he received by mail another note in the same handwriting. The message was short, expressing simply, "Thanks an awful lot for what you did for Brownie."

* * *

IF YOU keep your dog in a pen out of doors be sure that he has some sort of a platform or bench on which he can climb. While often a dog will suffer no harm from lying in the snow, he would rather have a bench or board on which to sun himself. Snow-covered or frozen ground becomes wet and muddy when it begins to thaw. A dog forced to lie unprotected on such ground may develop a serious cold from the dampness. Remember, a dog can stand any amount of cold weather providing he isn't exposed to drafts or dampness.

* * *

DURING a conversation with a new dog owner, I was asked if it is true that a dog should never be given milk. The questioner had been told that if a dog drank milk it would develop worms. Although there are a large number of dog owners who know that this is a myth, it is astounding to discover how many take it for truth. Milk will never cause worms.

Speaking of what not to feed your puppy, here are some items that should never be included in his diet: Beans, peas, potatoes, salt pork, ham, fresh white bread, cake, candy or any other desserts. A young dog's digestive tract is not equipped to assimilate these foods. Another hint—never give a dog cooked eggs in any form, but remember, that raw eggs are good for him.

* * *

IF YOU are raising a puppy, do not allow him to drink too much water, as a young dog requires very little drinking water, his diet in most cases including ample liquid. Contrary to prevalent opinion it is not wise to leave water constantly available to a puppy as he is inclined to drink too much with resultant digestive troubles. Up to six months of age a pup should drink water three or four times a day, and then have his drinking bowl removed. Fresh water should be put down each time that it is offered, and not immediately after a meal—at least an interval of 10 or 15 minutes.

Every Backyard Garden Needs Good Bean Patch

THE humble bean offers one of the cheapest forms of food energy. Extremely nutritious, it is rich in vitamins A, B and G and in the minerals we need. Because it produces a large quantity within small space, it is ideal for the home garden.

Of the innumerable varieties of beans, the most popular for home use are the snap, or string, types and the limas. Both varieties come as bush-growers and as climbers.

None of them is too fussy about soil or climate, except that they do like warm weather. Therefore your first planting should not be made until the ground is warm. Given warmth, beans thrive in any light well-limed, well-drained soil which has been enriched with an application of manure and a general fertilizer.

Sow bush beans an inch or so deep, two to four inches apart in rows two to three feet apart. Or plant them in hills, a foot apart, four plants to the hill. Sow lightly, as beans do better without thinning. Three-quarters of a pound of seed is enough for a 100-foot row and should yield about two bushels. Snap beans take from six to eight weeks to mature, so to insure a continuous harvest, make succession sowings every two weeks until August.

Top sketch shows how stones and hard clods of dirt will distort the shape of carrot root which should grow straight down in as nearly perfect cone shape as possible, as shown in lower sketch

AS SOON as the seedlings emerge an inch, start cultivating and keep at it faithfully to keep the weeds down. However, never cultivate when the plant is wet with rain or dew, for fear of spreading bean rust, anthranose or other fungus diseases to which beans are highly susceptible.

Climbing beans, because of the poles or other support on which they grow, require more space than do bush beans. Climbers can be trained on a wire fence, on string stretched between stakes along the row or on a trellis. But the commonest device is the familiar bean pole.

This should be a rough-barked sapling, six to eight feet long. Vines can be trained up single poles, leaning like inverted V's along the row or on "wigwam" frames—four poles, with bases three feet apart and their tops tied together tepee fashion. This form gives added strength against wind damage.

Bush limas are somewhat more fussy than snaps about warm weather and should be planted about 10 days later. They also require slightly richer soil. Push them into the ground—always with the eyes down—in rows two feet apart, three inches apart in the row. Cover with soil two inches deep.

Climbing limas are more productive than the bush variety and less liable to spoil in wet weather. Plant pole limas a week or so later than pole snaps, in hills three to four feet apart, five beans to the hill. If soil over the seeds becomes caked by heavy rains before the seedlings show, break up the crust with a steel rake, being careful not to strike deep enough to injure the tender sprouts.

ANOTHER excellent provider of nutrition is the carrot. It is rich in vitamins A, B and C. And it's a nice, well-behaved vegetable, giving the gardener little trouble.

A hardy vegetable, it responds to very simple culture. Carrots will grow in any fairly fertile soil, but do best in sandy loam or peat. As it is a tap root, that should grow straight down, the ground should be entirely free from stones or hard clods, which cause distortion. Manure also causes malformed roots, so a commercial fertilizer should be used.

As carrot seed germinates very slowly, taking about two weeks, you can sow quite thickly. Sow seeds one-quarter to one-half inch deep, in rows 18 inches apart. Cover with about a half inch of soil, except in heavy ground, where a quarter inch is sufficient.

It is a common practice to sow a few lettuce and radish seeds along with the carrots. Growing quickly, they mark the row, and are ready for use before the carrots need their space. When the feathery carrot tops are about two or three inches tall, thin out so plants stand at least an inch apart. There's danger that the roots will intertwine, producing badly shaped carrots of poor quality.

Later, when carrots are large enough for use, thin again, pulling alternate roots. The rest can be left, to grow and be harvested as you need them.

Nature Talks

By ROBERT CONNELL

WE PARTED last week at the edge of the woods. These woods are quite different from any others I know of on Vancouver Island. They lie on the south-west corner of a small lake. This corner, in years gone by, was a typical swamp and as late as twenty years ago both kalmia and Labrador tea grew plentifully at its west end. Then as the lake shrank a colony of lodgepole pine sprang up and this is now the dominant tree. It was not without a struggle, however, that the Labrador tea gave way. Once I found a plant that had made so determined a resistance that it had actually twined itself round one of the small pine trunks and for a dozen feet or more had raised itself towards the dim light that come through the tree tops.

ROBERT CONNELL

* * *

NOT far from the western limit of the pinewood grows a row of Sitka spruces, rare trees indeed in our limit. I know only two occurrences elsewhere; one is near Thetis Lake and one at Island View beach. Along the southern edge are a number of large western birches, even rarer with us.

As we look at these graceful trees as we enter the woods the leaves are just opening, bright, shining green, and the small slender catkins are yellowing with pollen. What is however particularly noticeable is that their bark lacks the conspicuous whiteness we associate with the western birch on the mainland and is, on the contrary, rather dark and dingy. However, on examining it closely we find that the bark is just as easily peeled off in delicate translucent sheets of brown, in both dark and golden tints.

There is something particularly attractive about a birch wood. Not only are the trees attractive in themselves with their bark patterned in pale, lens-shaped markings at right angles to the trunk, but they have associations with human life both in its business and its sentiment. Primitive peoples like our own Indian folk have used it for canoes and coverings and carried their infants in receptacles made of it; it has been cut into roof tiles and employed in tanning; in our own days it has been one of the valued woods for cabinet-making and it has supplied material for crates and hoops for barrels. It no longer has a connection with schools and education, as it had when it was quite properly denominated. "Afflictive birch, cursed by unlettered youth." It has entered into poetry for its beauty and the sweet rustle of its leaves, and it has charmed the lover by the facility with which its creamy bark takes the lettering of knife or pencil.

* * *

THE floor of the wood, both birch and pine, is today one unbroken sheet of shining green. It is almost exclusively made up one plant, that known as false lily of the valley, botanically—malanthemum bifolium; the systematic botanists are divided, but that is the name in our standard Henry's Flora of B.C. "Maianthemum" means "mayflower" and it actually flowers this month, but "bifolium" needs a word of explanation. It means "two-leaved" and is properly applicable to the little plant only in its flowering stage when the two large stem leaves are very conspicuous. In its sterile condition it has usually only a single leaf. Consequently some of the floras give it the name unifolium bifolium, the two-leaved one-leaf However, in spite of the names (and there are others) it is a very pretty little plant with its open cluster of white sweet-scented flowers. It flourishes in damp, shady places and is common in alder woods, but I dont think I have ever seen so fine a growth of it as here under the birches and pines.

There is a very similar plant found in Yorkshire woods near Scarborough; it is a common Continental plant. Another species is found in eastern America, and an almost identical one in eastern Asia. Probably they are all varieties of a single type species.

* * *

A NUMBER of shrubs are found in the shade of the woods. I found a single plant of Labrador tea still surviving in an area where I can remember many. It showed the effects of shade in its unusually large leaves and even more by the paleness and poverty of the wool that lined them underneath. The backward turned edges of the leaves and the wool are Nature's provision against excessive evaporation, a necessity when growing in the peculiar water conditions of bogs and swamps, in which water-transportation is slowed up and a condition of physiological drought prevails. This plant is a well-known substitute for tea, long used on the Northwest prairies by hunters, trappers and traders, and their kin.

* * *

I WAS a little surprised to come on the cascara bush here, but Pursh's buckthorn, to give it its botanical name englished, is, of course, a dweller in the woods, though not in woods of this very shady type. Its brown-green leaves were just unfolded from the winter buds and their closely parallel veins or ribs were very conspicuous. The red-barked dogwood or western dogwood, very different from our flowering dogwood with its great white bracts, was coming into leaf also, the reddish color of its branches and stems scarcely noticeable in the dim light. A close relative contributed to the natives of the Northwest in the old days a welcome substitute for tobacco or an addition to it. The outer red bark was removed and the inner bark taken off in strips which were then dried in the sun or by the fire and rubbed down to convenient size. The odor of its smoke is very characteristic and unforgettable, by which I do not mean that it was disagreeable.

Here, too, grows the common wild gooseberry, rather subdued in its customary hard growth but bearing a few flowers and prickles. The salal also was less vigorous but none the less persistent and the Oregon grape was decidedly less prickly.

While the undergrowth was not thick, hence the widespread sheet of false lily of the valley, it had just that straggling quality characteristic of shade conditions, and it often made walking a little difficult, at least, a certain alertness was necessary to avoid being tripped.

Garden Notes

* * *

Where there is a strong wind, protect weaker plants, like tomato vines, by putting up a barrier to check the wind. Old sacks or boards serve the purpose.

* * *

Vegetable refuse — such as leaves, pods and vines — should not be destroyed. Throw it in a corner of your garden. It makes the start of a good compost pile. After a time, this compost changes to humus and plant food.

* * *

Frontyard Patio Novel Idea For Modern House

In the centre of the terrace is planted a small tree, of the flowering crab, or hawthorne type, which will produce a beautiful display of bloom each spring and provide shade the rest of the year, while never growing so large as to dwarf the house.

Against the walls of the house are broad border plantings of dwarf annual flowers. While annual chrysanthemums are suggested by the artist to fill the beds, with a ribbon of dwarf ageratum to edge them, there are many other annuals which could be used.

Like most new houses in this day the lines of this one are severely plain, depending on good design and correct proportion for a pleasing effect. The flowers should harmonize with the coloring of the house, preferably in harmonious contrast with the walls.

Against grey walls, bright pink or red flowers, bordered with white alyssum would be striking. The red could be obtained with lilliput zinnias, celosia, petunias, or scarlet salvia.

Against white walls, a pink flower bed would be harmonious, such as could be planted with pompon asters, annual pinks, or small flowered pink petunias.

Annual chrysanthemums have both single and double flowers. The singles have a dark centre, surrounded by a zone of color different from petals. Purple, scarlet, orange, rose, yellow and white are included. They are late in flowering, but once started the flowers continue until frost kills the plants.

'Repairs To Farm Home' B.C. Bulletin Helpful

THE Rural Housing Advisory Committee for British Columbia, organized in 1947 by the provincial government, has completed its first publication which is now available for distribution.

This 45-page bulletin, "Repairs to the Farm Home," contains a large variety of information useful to the home owner who contemplates doing his own repairing or remodeling. It describes in detail and with many illustrations, just how and when to repair any part of the house from a leaking basement to a sagging roof.

The booklet is free to rural residents of British Columbia and may be obtained from the various District Agricultural Offices throughout the province, or by writing to the Secretary, Rural Housing Advisory Committee for British Columbia, University of British Columbia, Vancouver

The selection of material for future bulletins will be guided by the returns of the "Better Farm House" competition which is sponsored by the British Columbia Women's Institutes in co-operation with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The returns, 78 in number, which have been entered by the various Women's Institute branches throughout the province, have been exceptionally good and are now in the process of being judged.

Results and awards will be announced at the B.C. Women's Institutes' Convention which will be held at the University of British Columbia on June 1.

ONE WAY TO GET THERE

By WINIFRED CHURCHILL

"A cup of coffee, quick," John Standish inched himself on a stool of the all-night coffee stand. The clock said midnight. Surely it must be later than that!

The waiter set out the steaming cup. "Where's your helper?"

"Racing the stork's no joke. Didn't expect him so soon." Standish gulped the drink. "Fill her up again. Maybe it'll wake me up."

"Say," exclaimed the waiter, "a message came for you. I'd forgotten." He went to the back and returned with a slip of paper on which someone had taken down a telegram read over the telephone.

Standish read it and whooped. "It's a boy and all well!" He threw out a coin and started for the door.

"The hospital on Midville? Why not go in the lower road? Save you a few miles. Turn left at the fork."

"Never tried it. Is it all right?"

"Yes, when you haven't a load. Take it easy, Pop.'"

The night seemed endless. John had been tired before. Now the letdown from sheer relief almost was worse. But he kept awake by repeating over and over, "It's a boy and Sandra's all right."

Slowly the stars faded as the pale ghost of dawn crept out of the east. Midville Road was near, according to his reckoning. He should reach the city by 7.30. He was sure hungry. No solid food had passed his lips in 12 hours, and the effects of the coffee had long worn off. The day grew in brightness and warmth. About five miles more. How long each mile seemed. He told himself that it was now only a matter of minutes. Then he saw the familiar X: "Stop. Look. Listen. R.R." How many times that night had he crossed tracks? Counting them would have been a diversion; how sleepy he had become!

Then he heard the sound of an oncoming train; the roar of the engine, the ringing of the bell, the scream of the whistle. On and on it came. Could he cross the grade before it? Already he felt the hot breath of the engine. It was upon him. Too late to stop. He was going to get hit. He set his teeth and his brakes. Then the crash. Darkness! The train had won the race. He knew no more.

The bright sun was shining on him through a window. He moved slightly and felt a throb of pain. A hospital room. Then he remembered. He was still alive. He pressed the bell beside him. Why didn't someone come?

He stared.

The door opened and a nurse entered. She carried a tiny bundle. She smiled. "Do you want to meet your son?" she asked.

"And your wife is doing fine and happy that you will be out of the hospital before she is. It is not everyone who can come out of such a crash as you did, with only a few bruises. You must have fallen asleep when you crashed into the telephone pole near the hospital."

The nurse smiled again. "Train! Why, Mr. Standish, that's an abandoned track. No train has passed over it in five years."

IN THE SPRING

By KERRY WOOD

Slowly he took up the pen. He stared at the blank sheet a moment, his lean dark face reflecting the emotional turmoil. Then he swiftly wrote the traditional heading: Last Will and Testament. The finality of the words made him pause and stare out at the miracle of another springtime. But his mood was sombre.

The bequests shouldn't take long, he thought, listing his few relatives and allotting his possessions impartially.

But what about Lucy? Ah, yes—Lucy! The way she smiled, with her eyes full of sparkling lights. Her laughter which came so often. Yet she knew when to be serious, too. Lucy was a loyal one, dependable at all seasons. It was too bad that he hadn't seen much of her lately.

"I'll put her name down," he decided, pleased with the decision. He wrote busily.

The pleasant interlude was finished. Again the sharply chiseled features revealed inward trouble. What about Jennifer?

Yet it was really Jennifer who had caused him to take this step. Jennifer . . . with her lazy eyes, screened so silkily to convey so much subtle meaning. And her full lips, so promising and yet—so demanding. She was slow to laugh, and her laughter often hurt—this last time, it had hurt deeply. No! He would not write Jennifer's name in this document.

Now: "Directions for the funeral."

He wrote the four words and stared at them solemnly. They recalled memories of funerals he had attended, each with its own poignant sadness. His mother's death, then his sister's, and Jimmy Dowler, Millie Foss, Bart Domoney. The tearful people, the cloying smell of flowers, and the organ quavering a dirge.

Music meant a great deal to him. At evening he loved to finger the piano, finding peace in the chorded melody. Often he turned to the phonograph, playing records that suited his mood. His tastes were self-formed, his enthusiasms varied. He liked piano classics, old folk airs, the primitive throb of Latin American music. But best of all were the full-bodied symphonies.

"I'll even direct what music they're to play. They can use records from my collection and play them on my machine. Of course, a real orchestra would be best."

His face became wistful. He had never attended a symphony concert. The farm was so far from the music centres, and time and money. As recompense, there had been the magical presence of the radio and his beloved records. He brusquely dismissed the orchestra idea: records would do. He grinned as he thought about one album, recordings by a vivacious Brazilian orchestra. He almost laughed, picturing the effect. Then leaned over the paper.

"Play the latter end of Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, starting with the Jolly Gathering of Country Folk and ending with Gladsome and Thankful Feelings After the Storm." That would be ideal, since he was a farmer. It'd please almost everyone, too.

That settled, he wrote swiftly:

"Bury me in that lovely glade beneath Berry Hill on the back part of the farm, just about the brook. Don't bother about a headstone, but plant a young maple. Some of my earthly remains will go into its growth and every spring I'll be reborn again."

Pleased, he read over the document and signed it with a flourish. He felt better; a lot better.

"Now I can forget about it. After all, if I last the normal span, there's still another 40-odd years ahead of me!"

He began whistling the love song from Schubert, but stopped abruptly when he remembered that the flirtations Jennifer had just broken his heart with her cruel laughter when she said no.

"Maybe it's just as well," he muttered, staring moodily out the window. "Man, it's a grand evening! I'll bet a hatch will be on the creek, right now. The trout'll be rising mad."

A WOMAN FOR YOU

By MARY AKSIM

THE first word of it was the letter which told Tom Elliott that the Agnew lot would no longer be at his disposal for a garden. A few days later a truck unloaded a pile of lumber on the lot.

Was Mamie Agnew coming back to the village after all these years? No one seemed to know, but it wasn't long until the house began to take shape.

A perfect little house with a grey fireplace chimney against the red wall and a low-sweeping green roof. And while the carpenters were still hammering away, laying the glossy floors, along came a landscape gardener and set out rose bushes and lavender and lilac in just the right places, and workmen laid a flagstone walk with moss between the stones.

And as soon as the carpenters and gardeners had gone, a moving van drove up, and a woman directed the placing of the furniture and even the hanging of the curtains. Mary Elliot had a good look at some of the furniture from her upstairs window and she said that there were chairs done in white satin brocade. The village wives gasped. It was as if someone had made a wish for the most beautiful little house in all the world and a good fairy had granted it.

For a week the house waited and the village waited too—and then one night while the village slept, a long low coupe was parked in front. In the morning the place was agog with excitement. Miss Mamie had come in the night. What was she like? Was she married?

Miss Mamie was not married and she intended to live in the village the rest of her days. She loved the house. She loved the village. It was good to get back after all these years. Mary Elliot got all this information when she carried over four piping biscuits in a tea napkin just before noon. Miss Mamie, she said, was wonderful, simply wonderful — and her clothes . . . She sighed ecstatically to imply that Miss Mamie had exhibited her wardrobe piece by piece.

Soon everyone knew that Miss Mamie had had a brilliant career in the city, that she had traveled to Europe and had moved in the best society, so the village ladies went to call on her corseted stiffly and hatted and gloved and sat uncomfortably on garden chairs and drank iced tea through colored glass straws and ate cool sandwiches with a disciplined relish.

Miss Mamie received them in a simple dress, her silver hair brushed up to the top of her head in a soft swirl. They answered her inquiries about their families and listened to her memories of the village which she had always remembered as the dearest place on earth. They watched her beautiful hands and the relaxed movements of her supple body and looked longingly through her eyes at a strange new world. And afterwards she showed them the house.

They looked at the bright rooms and paused in front of the mirrored doors which gave back their images broad-hipped and drab and touched the hangings surreptitiously and went home to their kitchen to set out supper for their hungry families. And at the table they described it all —the Dresden figurines and the watered silk shower curtains, the fireplace and the French doors, to an audience which gulped strong tea out of heavy cups and remained unimpressed.

And Miss Mamie lay under the stars those first evenings and told her happiness over and over to herself. The dear tranquility of it all. And these dear people. She was at home at last, among old friends . . . And the old gnawing loneliness was gone . . . gone forever.

But in a very short time all the village wives had called on Miss Mamie, had seen the house, had known their hour of it-might-have-been, had speculated on Miss Mamie's age and income, had aired their own and their husbands' opinions concerning the wearing of slacks by grey-haired women, and little by little they settled back into the old groove—working in their houses and gardens, humming as they sorted golden piles of fruit for canning, washing up after meals with a great splashing of suds. And if they thought at all of the new house, they grew embarrassed and were inclined to agree with their husbands as to the practicability of pastel upholstery. They hailed Miss Mamie cheerily as they passed by and they smiled at her—but it was a rich-woman-to-poor-woman smile, as old as creation.

One afternoon Miss Mamie lay on the lawn listening to the Elliot's noisily if amicably disputing the location of a new rose bush and the excited squeaks of the Turner twins as they clacked the pots for a win in croquet, and suddenly, quite suddenly, the little house wasn't what she wanted after all. Mary Elliot saw Miss Mamie locking the front door, but she didn't think anything about it at the time.

The house waited and the village waited but Miss Mamie didn't come back. A city firm arranged the sale of the house to the new high school principal when school opened.

Months later Harry Turner saw Miss Mamie in the city. She said she was back again as a buyer with her old firm and Harry said she looked happy. But what surprised Harry most was the gay way Miss Mamie laughed when he mentioned the house. She didn't seem to care what had happened to it.

"A house isn't everything," she told him, as if sharing a secret. "That's a woman for you!" said Harry.

IT TAKES TIME

By M. J. COLLINS

Ellen gasped with dismay as they turned in the gate. Her husband waved his hand airily. "Your home, m'lady."

"It's lovely." David didn't notice the quaver in her voice as he jumped out.

The unpainted house sat solidly on a slight rise back from the road. A weathered barn loomed behind and other buildings were scattered around. Cows were drinking from a trough by the squeaking windmill. The scene was bleak, windswept. Ellen's friends had warned her about suddenly marrying a farmer.

An old man came out. He had a straggly beard and when he smiled he was toothless.

"We're here, George!" David cried, scooping Ellen up and into the house by way of the woodshed. George followed with their suitcases. "Anything else?" he asked.

"Yes," David said. "I'll get them." He hurried out, whistling.

"'Fraid the place ain't just the way a woman wants it," George fumbled over the Mrs. Martin. "I scrubbed it down just as Dave said." Ellen thanked him. She moved closed to the stove. Dave came in carrying packages.

David sniffed. "What's in the pot, George?"

Ellen noticed that the table was set.

"You'll have to resign as cook, George." David laughed. Ellen felt panic; she hardly knew how to cook. Dave took her coat and hung it up on a nail.

The chicken was tender and, despite herself, Ellen enjoyed it. George explained the lack of bread. "The damn baker, begin' your pardon, Mrs., ain't showed up yet. I mixed up a batch of bakin' soda biscuits."

A few days later the weather turned warm, spring on the way. But there was little sunshine in Ellen's heart. Everything, including her cooking, went wrong. Not that David complained. The fire in the old stove wouldn't stay lit. She couldn't remember to shove wood into its hungry jaw every five minutes. Work seemed to pile up. She longed for the routine of the office and her typewriter.

George fumbled over the Mrs. Martin.

Ellen suddenly saw red. "Get out, you old fool!" She flung a piece of wood at him. She fled, crying. Old George didn't know what to do. In a few years David would have the best farm in the district. He shuffled out. David had told him to get a flower bed ready. He was raking when Ellen came out.

"I'm sorry. I don't know what came over me."

"Maybe I sort of know how you feel."

"What are you doing?"

"Dave wants to plant some flowers for you. After you plant them, all you have to do is pull the weeds and wait." After a moment he added: "Unless you have a frost or dry weather. Never know what will happen. It takes time to do anything on a farm."

"I see. Will you take David a sealer of lemonade? It must be dusty where he's working." She had to get rid of him, the bus went by in 20 minutes and her suitcase was packed. What good was she to David? Pull the weeds out! Well, she was a weed and there was no place on a farm for weeds.

Did she love David or herself? A bright green roadster came to a stop. The jaunty young man eyed her with approval. "Want a ride?"
